Washington, D. C., March 28, 1921.

SIR:

I transmit herewith Volume I of the Reports of the Fourteenth Decennial Census, which presents statistics showing the number and distribution of the population of the United States by states, counties, incorporated places, and other minor civil divisions.

Respectfully,

SAM. L. ROGERS,
Director of the Census.

HON. HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce.

INTRODUCTION.

SCOPE AND CHARACTER OF POPULATION REPORTS.

General description of reports.—At the Fourteenth Census two reports pertaining to population have been prepared, in bulletin form, for each state and the District of Columbia. These bulletins are entitled "Number of Inhabitants, by Counties and Minor Civil Divisions," and "Composition and Characteristics of the Population," respectively. The first bulletin shows the distribution of the population of the state by counties, incorporated places, and other civil divisions of counties, and also gives figures for the urban and rural population of the state and of each county separately. The second bulletin presents statistics as to color or race, nativity, parentage, sex, age, school attendance, illiteracy, and dwellings and families, and, for the foreign-born white population, citizenship and country of birth, for the state and for each of its counties and cities. The two bulletins cover all the principal topics of the population census for a given state which are to be presented for counties and small cities. For each state and for its principal cities, statistics as to marital condition, state or territory of birth, year of immigration, country of birth of parents, mother tongue, inability to speak English, occupations, and ownership of homes will be included in the final reports of the Fourteenth Census.

This volume presents the statistics contained in the first series of state bulletins, together with certain additional information. It thus contains all the Fourteenth Census statistics relative to the distribution of the population of the United States among the various communities and classes of communities, but gives no information in regard to the distribution according to color or race, sex, age, nativity, etc. The detailed tables giving statistics as to the population of counties, incorporated places, and other subdivisions of counties, and for the urban and rural population separately (Tables 49 to 53, inclusive), are made up from the corresponding tables in the several state bulletins. The various summary tables (Tables 1 to 48, inclusive) are derived from these detailed tables.

The statistics as to the composition and characteristics of the population for the United States as a whole are presented in Volume III.

Statistics by geographic divisions.—In addition to the presentation by states, this volume gives statistics for nine groups of states which are designated as geographic divisions. The states which constitute the respective divisions can be ascertained by reference to the map on page 8. The states within each of these divisions are for the most part fairly homogeneous in physical characteristics, as well as in the characteristics of their population and in their social and economic conditions, whereas each division differs more or less sharply from most of the others in these respects. In forming these groups of states the lines have been based partly on present and partly on historical conditions. The advantage of this geographical order lies chiefly in the ease with which conditions in contiguous states can be compared. In certain cases these nine geographic divisions are also grouped in the summary tables into three great sections—the North, which comprises the New England, Middle Atlantic, East North Central, and West North Central divisions; the South, which comprises the South Atlantic, East South Central, and West South Central divisions; and the West, which comprises the Mountain and Pacific divisions.

Statistics for urban and rural communities.—This report contains, in addition to tables giving the population of individual cities, a table (No. 50) presenting, by states and counties, the population of urban communities taken as a group in comparison with the population of rural territory. In the summary tables, however, the cities are grouped in several size classes, while the rural population is classified as residing either in incorporated places or in strictly rural territory. In drawing the distinction between urban and rural population, all incorporated places (and all towns in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire) having 2,500 inhabitants or more are treated as urban and the remainder of the country as rural.

Comparative and derivative figures.—In most of the tables in this volume there are presented, in addition to the statistics for 1920, comparative figures for earlier censuses. In many cases rates of increase, and sometimes important averages and percentages, are also given. The full significance of the census figures is brought out only by comparisons between different censuses for the same area and between different areas for the same census, and comparisons based upon absolute numbers are usually much less instructive and less readily grasped than those based upon percentages and averages.

Introductory and explanatory text.—This volume contains very little text other than that of an explanatory character, needed to enable the reader to understand fully the meaning of the statistical tables. Practically no attempt has been made to analyze or interpret the statistics. Such analytical and interpretative discussion, while possessing some value, has not been deemed of sufficient importance to justify the inevitable delay in the publication of the census reports which would have been entailed by its preparation.

Maps and diagrams.—Maps and diagrams have been employed in this volume for the graphic presentation of some of the more important facts in connection with the distribution of the population. For convenient reference, such of these maps and diagrams as are based on the summary tables have been placed, as a rule, on the same pages, respectively, with the tables from which they are derived, or on the pages immediately preceding or following. The only maps based on the detailed tables are those showing, by counties, the rates of increase or decrease and the density of the population. These maps, derived from Tables 49 and 50, are given on pages 88-90.

The map preceding page 7 shows in red the various acquisitions of territory by the United States. The dates given on this map refer to the years in which the treaties were signed, not necessarily those in which they were ratified. For instance, for Guam, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, the year of accession is usually given as 1899, but that given on the map is 1898, the treaty of Paris having been signed December 10, 1898, although ratifications were not exchanged until the next year. Similarly, in the case of Samoa the date shown, 1899, refers to the year in which the treaty by which the United States acquired the islands was signed, although it was not ratified until 1900. The dates given are those used by the General Land Office on its maps and in referring to these acquisitions.

It may be noted that the area of Texas when it was annexed to the United States was greater than that shown by the map, the boundary between the Louisiana Purchase and the Spanish possessions in America having been modified by the Florida Purchase treaty of 1819. At the time of its annexation, Texas included, in addition to its present area, territory now constituting parts of New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and a small part of southern Wyoming.

GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THE FOURTEENTH CENSUS ACT.

The Thirteenth Census Act, approved July 2, 1909 provided for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. The Fourteenth Census could, therefore, have been taken under the authority of that act; but numerous changes, mostly of a minor character, were deemed desirable, and accordingly an entirely new law entitled "An act to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses," approved March 3, 1919, was enacted. This act designated the three years beginning on the first day of July next preceding each decennial census as the "decennial census period," and provided for an expansion, during that period, of the force of the permanent bureau in Washington, and for the creation of a special field force to collect the census data. The principal subjects covered by the Fourteenth Census were the same as those provided for by the Thirteenth Census Act, namely, population, agriculture, manufactures, and mines and quarries (including oil and gas wells). In addition an inquiry on forestry and forest products was provided for, and the census of agriculture was broadened to include the subject of drainage and a more detailed inquiry regarding irrigation than had been made in 1910.

AREA OF ENUMERATION.

The Fourteenth Census enumeration covered the United States proper; the outlying possessions except the Philippines and the Virgin Islands; the military, Red Cross, and consular services abroad; and the naval service abroad or in American waters but not on fixed station. No provision was made by the Fourteenth Census Act for the enumeration of the Philippines, a census of those islands having been taken by the Philippine Government as of December 31, 1918, or of the Virgin Islands, for which a special census was taken as of November 1, 1917. Statistics for the outlying possessions enumerated have been published in separate reports, but the tables in this volume, with the exception of Tables 1, 10, 11, and 54, relate only to the United States proper. Statistics for the outlying possessions have been excluded from the remaining tables because of the obvious differences which exist between these possessions and the United States proper with respect to the characteristics of the population and to social and economic conditions.

In the Fourteenth Census Reports the term "United States" when used without qualification refers to the 48 states and the District of Columbia, exclusive of the outlying territories and possessions. Sometimes, however, the United States in this sense is referred to as the "United States proper" or as "continental United States."

The census of 1890 was the first at which a complete enumeration was made of the area now comprised within the boundaries of the 48 states and the District of Columbia. In 1880 no enumeration had been made of persons living in the Indian Territory and on Indian reservations, and at earlier censuses large tracts of unorganized and sparsely settled territory were not canvassed by the enumerators.

The census of 1790 covered the area now embraced in the District of Columbia and the following-named states: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee. In that year Maine was a part of Massachusetts, West Virginia was a part of Virginia, the District of Columbia was a part of Maryland, Kentucky was a part of Virginia, and Tennessee (formerly a part of North Carolina) constituted the greater part of the Territory South of the River Ohio.

The area added at each census to the area of enumeration within the boundaries of continental United States may be briefly indicated as follows:

1800.—The area now constituting the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and the southern parts of Alabama and Mississippi. In that year the area now within the states of Illinois and Wisconsin and a part of the present area of Michigan were included in the territory of Indiana; and three years later, when Ohio was admitted to the Union as a state, the remainder of the territory in 1800 was substantially that residing within the present limits of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. The population shown for Mississippi territory in 1800 was that residing within the territory as then constituted, which embraced the area now forming the southern parts of the states of Mississippi and Alabama.

1810.—The area now constituting the northern parts of Mississippi and Alabama and that now embraced within the states of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri. (The remainder of the Louisiana Purchase of 1803 was not enumerated in 1810.) The population shown for Mississippi for 1810 included that residing within the present limits of Alabama.

1820.—No change. Florida was purchased in 1819, but was not enumerated in 1820.

1830.—Florida.

1840.—Iowa territory, including the greater part of the area now constituting Minnesota.

1850.—Texas, Utah, California, that part of New Mexico territory now constituting the state of New Mexico, with the exception of a small portion of the Gadsden Purchase of 1853, and that part of the territory of Oregon now constituting the states of Oregon and Washington. The population shown for Oregon for 1850 includes that of the present area of Washington.

1860.—Dakota territory (organized in 1861 from the area now embraced within the states of North and South Dakota and those parts of Montana and Wyoming lying east of the crest of the Rocky Mountains and north of the forty-third parallel), Nebraska (then including that part of the area now constituting Wyoming which lay south of the forty-third parallel and east of the Rocky Mountains), Kansas, Colorado, Nevada, that part of Washington territory now constituting Idaho and those portions of Montana and Wyoming lying west of the Rocky Mountains, that part of New Mexico territory now constituting the state of Arizona (including the greater portion of the Gadsden Purchase of 1853), and that part of the Gadsden Purchase which now forms the southwestern part of New Mexico. The population shown for Washington territory for 1860 was that residing within the limits of the territory as then constituted, which embraced the area of the present states of Washington, Idaho, and western Montana and Wyoming.

1870.—No change.

1880.—No change.

1890.—Indian Territory and Oklahoma territory (later combined to form the state of Oklahoma) and Indian reservations.

1900.—No change.

1910.—No change.

1920.—No change.

Alaska was first included in the area of enumeration at a Federal decennial census in 1880, Hawaii in 1900, Porto Rico in 1910, and American Samoa, Guam, and the Panama Canal Zone in 1920; but a special census of Porto Rico was taken in 1899 under the direction of the War Department, and a special census of the Panama Canal Zone was taken in 1912 by the Department of Civil Administration of the Isthmian Canal Commission. The Philippine Islands have never been enumerated at a decennial census, but a special census of the archipelago was taken in 1903 by the Philippine Commission, and another census was taken in 1919 (as of date December 31, 1918) by the Philippine Government. The only enumeration of the Virgin Islands thus far made by the United States was the special census of November 1, 1917.

DATE OF ENUMERATION.

Section 20 of the Fourteenth Census Act provided that the enumeration of the population should be made as of January 1, 1920. The date of the Thirteenth Census was April 15, 1910; at previous censuses, beginning with that of 1830, the date to which the enumeration related was June 1; and in 1790, 1800, 1810, and 1820 the census date was the first Monday in August. The change to January 1 was made in deference to the wishes of the Department of Agriculture and of the various interests making use of agricultural statistics. In some respects this date has decided advantages over any other for the purposes of an agricultural census. The past year's work on all farms has been finished by January 1, and the coming year's work has not as a rule been begun. Practically all farmers are occupying the farms which they operated during the preceding year, whereas a few months later many of the renters will have removed to other farms. Again, farm animals are born in large numbers during the spring and early summer but not in December or January, and therefore a live-stock census referring to January 1 is of far more value than one taken several months later.

The work of actual enumeration began on January 2, 1920. Enumerators in cities of 2,500 inhabitants or more, where the work consisted mainly in the enumeration of the population, were required by the law to complete their canvass within two weeks from the date of commencement; but the enumerators in the smaller towns and villages and in the country districts, partly because of the greater area which they had to cover and partly because they collected data on agriculture as well as on population, were allowed 30 days.

ENUMERATION AT USUAL PLACE OF ABODE.

For the country as a whole and for every state and every political subdivision within the country, the population enumerated is the resident population. The enumerators, under the census law, were instructed to enumerate persons at their "usual place of abode"—that is, at their permanent homes or regular lodging places. Hence persons were not in all cases counted in the places where they happened to be found by the enumerators, and particularly were not always counted in the places where they transacted their daily business. Thus it happens that the business or industrial population of all important cities includes considerable numbers of persons who are not counted as a part of the census population of those cities. These persons transact their daily business or perform their daily work, spend a considerable proportion of their incomes, and perhaps even eat all or a part of their meals in the cities, but have their lodging places outside the municipal limits.

Persons temporarily absent from their usual places of abode—for example, on visits, on business, traveling for pleasure, attending school or college, or sick in hospitals—were enumerated at the places where they habitually resided, information regarding them having been obtained from relatives or acquaintances. Persons having no fixed places of abode anywhere, however, were required by the census law to be enumerated where they slept on the night of January 1, 1920.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES AND OF ITS OUTLYING POSSESSIONS.

In 1920 the aggregate population of the United States with its outlying possessions was nearly 118,000,000. The distribution of this population is shown by Table 1.

The United States with its outlying possessions occupies approximately 6.7 per cent of the world's land area and embraces approximately 6.9 per cent of its population.*

* The area and population of the United States are compared with the area and population of other countries and of the continental divisions of the earth in the following table, which gives separate figures for the 11 countries or empires each having a population, according to the latest census or estimate available, in excess of 25,000,000. The areas, except for the United States, are taken from the Statesman's Year-Book for 1920. The population figures for the British Empire, Russia, France, Japan, Netherlands, Italy, and Poland were secured from the embassies or legations of those countries. The population shown for China is the usual estimate of 400,000,000, but other estimates range from 340,000,000 to 440,000,000. The figures for the remaining foreign countries were obtained from the Statesman's Year-Book for 1920. The figures for population do not in all cases relate to the year 1920, and in general those for both population and area must be regarded merely as estimates or approximations.

The item "Military and naval, etc., services abroad" represents the following classes of persons: Officers and enlisted men in the military service abroad; persons in the service of the American Red Cross abroad, or in the consular service of the United States abroad, together with members of their families, including servants, who were actually residing with them at their posts of duty; officers and enlisted men in the naval service abroad or in American waters, but not on fixed station. Persons in the military service in the United States were enumerated as residents of the states, counties, and minor civil divisions in which their posts of duty were located, and the members of their families were enumerated where they actually resided.

The growth of population since 1790 is shown in Table 2, which gives the population at each census and the increase during each decade for the country as a whole, exclusive of outlying territory.

Since the Twelfth Census was taken as of June 1, 1900, the Thirteenth as of April 15, 1910, and the Fourteenth as of January 1, 1920, the period between the Twelfth and Thirteenth Census dates was nine years and ten and one-half months, and that between the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Census dates was nine years and eight and one-half months. It may be estimated that the population increase from April 15 to June 1, 1910, the end of a full decennial period from the Twelfth Census date, was not less than 200,000, a number sufficient to raise the decennial rate of increase from 21 to 21.3 per cent. Similarly, it may be estimated that the population increase from January 1 to

April 15, 1920, the end of a full decennial period from the Thirteenth Census date, was more than 400,000, which, added to the increase between the census dates, would represent a decennial rate of 15.4 per cent.

Some explanation is necessary in regard to the revised percentages given in the last column of Table 2 for the decades 1860-1870 and 1870-1880. The percentages of increase shown for these decades for the country as a whole were materially affected by the small increase recorded for the Southern states at the census of 1870. The evidence is conclusive, however, that the enumeration of 1870 was incomplete in those states, and that their population was, in consequence, understated. The census returns, therefore, give for the decade 1860-1870 a rate of increase which is undoubtedly below, and for the decade 1870-1880 one which is undoubtedly above, the true rate. An estimate of the true population of the country in 1870 was made in the census report for 1890 (Population, Part I, pp. xi, xii, and xvi). In that report the number of omissions in the census of 1870 was estimated to have exceeded 1,200,000, and the true population of the country in 1870 was accordingly estimated to have been 39,818,449 instead of 38,558,371, the number derived from the 1870 returns. On the basis of this revised population total, the increase for the decade 1860-1870 became 8,375,128, or 26.6 per cent (instead of 7,115,050, or 22.6 per cent), and that for the succeeding decade, 10,337,334, or 26 per cent (instead of 11,597,412, or 30.1 per cent).

As stated in the introduction, Indians and other persons in Indian Territory and on Indian reservations were enumerated for the first time in 1890. Consequently the entire population of these areas in 1890—that is, 325,464, and not simply the excess of the 1890 over the 1880 population (which can not be determined)—enters into the aggregate population increase given in Table 2 for the decade 1880-1890. Since this increase is therefore partly attributable to extension of the area of enumeration in 1890, it does not accurately indicate the growth of population within the area enumerated in either 1880 or 1890. The increase within the area enumerated in 1880 may be determined by eliminating from the 1890 population these 325,464 Indians and other persons. The population in 1890 of the area enumerated in 1880 within the limits of continental United States was 62,622,250, which gives an increase for the decade 1880-1890, within this area, of 12,466,467, or 24.9 per cent. This is probably a more nearly correct statement of the increase than that based on the face of the returns (12,791,931, or 25.5 per cent) without taking into account the extension of the area of enumeration.

For each of the earlier decades in which the area enumerated has been extended, the increase may also be similarly determined by excluding the population of the areas newly added. The results of such a calculation are shown in Table 3. While the rates so computed do not differ very materially from those given in Table 2, the modifications result in making the percentage increases for the first seven decades more nearly uniform. The exceptionally high rates shown in Table 2 for the decades ending, respectively, in 1800, 1810, 1850, and 1860 are accounted for in some measure by extensions of the area of enumeration. Since, however, the population within these added areas in each given decade has undoubtedly grown to a greater or less extent by net migration from other sections of the country—which obviously lessened the population growth to an equal extent in those sections—the rate obtained by excluding the population of these areas is somewhat below, as the unadjusted rate in Table 2 is somewhat above, the true rate for the country as a whole. The error arises, in the one case, from including in the increase the population of the added areas at the beginning of the decade, and, in the other case, from excluding the migrants from the population at the end of the decade. In Table 3 the estimated population for 1870 has been used in reckoning the increases for the decades ending in 1870 and 1880. To complete the table, increases have been included from Table 2 for decades in which there was no change in the area of enumeration.

Since it includes a net gain by immigration, the growth of the aggregate population from census to census exceeds the natural increase, or excess of births over deaths.

Summarizing, it may be noted that during each of the seven decades from 1790 to 1860 the population increased with remarkable uniformity by approximately one-third; that during each of the next three decades, from 1860 to 1890, the increase was approximately one-fourth; that during the two decades following the decennial rate of growth was slightly more than one-fifth; and that during the last decade, 1910-1920, the rate was only a little more than one-seventh. The decline in the decennial rate of increase, therefore, has not been gradual from decade to decade but has taken place in three abrupt breaks downward—between 1860 and 1870, between 1890 and 1900, and between 1910 and 1920, each of the four specified rates of growth, except the last, having been maintained with little change for two or more decades.

It may be noted also that, with the exception of that for the last decade, the numerical increase during each ten-year period has been greater than that for any preceding one (using, for the purpose of comparison, the estimated increase between 1860 and 1870, as given in Table 3). Moreover, the numerical increase during the decade 1910-1920 was greater than that for any other decade except the one immediately preceding.

POPULATION BY DIVISIONS AND STATES.

Distribution of the population and rank of states and divisions.—Table 8 (pp. 20 and 21) shows the population and rank according to population of each geographic division and each state from the earliest census to 1920. It will be noted from that table that there has been no change between 1910 and 1920 in rank among the leading six states—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Texas, and Massachusetts—but Michigan, which ranked eighth at the census of 1910, now ranks seventh, and California, which ranked twelfth in 1910, now ranks eighth, both these states having passed Missouri, which ranked seventh in 1910 and now ranks ninth. There has been no change in the rank of the leading four states since 1890. It is also to be noted that no state has maintained the same rank without interruption from 1790 to 1920. New York has had first place at each census beginning with that of 1820; Pennsylvania has ranked second in all census years from 1790 to 1920, except 1810 and 1820, when it ranked third; Illinois did not attain third place until 1890; Ohio, which now ranks fourth, has held that position continuously since 1890, but ranked third from 1840 to 1880; Texas did not reach fifth position until 1910; and Massachusetts has ranked sixth only in 1850, 1890, 1910, and 1920.

Nearly one-fifth of the total population of the country in 1790 was returned from Virginia, which ranked first among the states in that year as well as in 1800 and 1810.

In 1790 Maine was a district of Massachusetts; Vermont had not been admitted to the Union; the areas now constituting West Virginia and Kentucky formed parts of Virginia; the area now constituting Tennessee formed the greater part of the Territory South of the River Ohio; the area under the jurisdiction of Georgia extended westward to the Mississippi River; and the area now constituting Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, northeastern and northwestern Minnesota, northeastern North Dakota, and a small section of northeastern South Dakota was known as the Territory Northwest of the Ohio River. Florida and a strip along the southern border of Georgia as then constituted, together with the region west of the Mississippi River, were held by Spain. Although Maine, Vermont, Kentucky, and Tennessee were not in existence as states of the Union in 1790, the census returns for that year showed separately the population of the areas now constituting those states. No enumeration was made of the Territory Northwest of the Ohio River. Practically the total population returned in 1790, numbering 3,929,214, with the exception of 109,368 inhabitants of the region which now constitutes Kentucky and Tennessee, lived in the area embraced within the limits of the three Atlantic Seaboard divisions—New England, Middle Atlantic, and South Atlantic.

Not more than 5 per cent of the population of the country in 1790 lived west of the Appalachian Mountains, the geographic distribution of the population giving an average depth of settlement, or distance of habitation from the coast, of 255 miles.

The geographic distribution of the population by divisions and sections at the censuses of 1850, 1890, 1900, 1910, and 1920 is shown by percentages in Table 4, which gives also the population in 1920 of each section and division.

In this table, as in other tables where figures are presented for geographic sections, the term "the North" denotes the 21 states lying north of the southern boundary of Pennsylvania, the Ohio River, and the southern boundaries of Missouri and Kansas, and east of the western boundaries of Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas; "the South" signifies the 16 states and the District of Columbia lying south of the North and east of New Mexico; and "the West" refers to the 11 states lying west of the North and the South. (See map, p. 8.)

Data for 1850 are included in Table 4 as representing conditions immediately after the last considerable accession to the area of the United States. As already pointed out, a very large area lying west of the Mississippi River was not enumerated at the census of 1850; in fact, the extent of this unenumerated area was approximately as great as that of the area canvassed by the enumerators. Since this unenumerated area was, however, practically all unsettled territory, its scanty population if taken into account could not materially affect the percentages shown in Table 4.

It will be noted from the table that the North had substantially the same proportion of the population of the United States in 1920 as in 1850, whereas the South's percentage has decreased materially and the West's has increased greatly.

Table 5 shows the rank of the states according to population at each of the last three censuses.

In the section east of the Mississippi River, 6 states and the District of Columbia gained in rank between 1910 and 1920, 11 states made no change, and 9 lost in rank; and in the section west of the Mississippi, 9 states gained in rank, 7 made no change, and 6 lost in rank.

Growth of population.—The decennial increases, by number and per cent, for the several divisions and states during each decade from 1790 to 1920 are given in Table 9 (pp. 22 and 23). For convenience the figures for the last two decades are repeated in Table 6; the divisions and states being arranged in the order of their rates of increase during the decade 1910-1920. The maps on page 19 show graphically the relative rates of growth in the several states for the decades 1910-1920 and 1900-1910.

It will be seen from Table 6 that in 20 states and the District of Columbia the rates of increase were greater than that for the United States, that in 25 states the rates of increase were smaller than that for the country as a whole, and that in 3 states the population decreased. Of the most populous 10 states, 6 (Illinois, Ohio, Texas, Michigan, California, and New Jersey) show greater rates of increase than the country as a whole and 4 (New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Missouri) show smaller rates.

In 15 states the population increased less than 10 per cent, or decreased. Five of these—South Dakota, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Nevada—had fewer than 800,000 inhabitants each, their combined population being only 2,277,479, but each of the remaining 10 had more than 1,000,000 inhabitants, and their combined population was 22,935,911.

The states with relatively high rates of increase are scattered over the entire country, from Idaho and California in the West to Connecticut and Florida in the East; and, similarly, the states whose population increased at low rates, or decreased, are scattered from Nevada in the Mountain division and South Dakota and Nebraska in the West North Central division to Maine in the New England and Mississippi in the East South Central division. Of the 20 states whose population increased more rapidly than that of the United States, 8 are east and 12 are west of the Mississippi River; and of the 28 states whose population increased less rapidly than that of the country as a whole, or decreased, 18 are east and 10 are west of the Mississippi. Of the last-mentioned 10 states, however, 4, which border on the Mississippi, lie in the eastern half of the country.

Of the 21 Northern states only 6 (Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and Minnesota) and of the 16 Southern states only 5 (West Virginia, North Carolina, Florida, Oklahoma, and Texas) increased in population more rapidly than the United States as a whole; but of the 11 Western states, all but 2 (New Mexico and Nevada) show increases at greater rates than that for the entire country. The westward migration which has been so distinguishing a characteristic of the country's growth showed a pronounced decline during the last decade. Between 1900 and 1910 all the Western states increased at rates far in excess of the average for the United States, the rate for Utah being the only one which was less than twice as great as that for the country as a whole; but between 1910 and 1920 only 5 of the Western states—Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming—increased at rates more than double that for the United States.

1 Includes population of Indian Territory for 1900.

Table 7 presents a comparison, in percentages, of the distribution of the total population in 1920, 1910, and 1850, among the several sections and geographic divisions, with the distribution of the increase in population during the last two decades and during the 70-year period 1850-1920.

The North's proportion of the total population varied only to a slight degree between 1850 and 1920, and its proportion of the total increase during the 70-year period was exactly the same as its proportion of the total population at the end of the period. Thus the loss through migration to the West was counterbalanced by immigration. For the South, however, the disparity between the proportion of the increase and the proportion of the total population was very much greater. That section had 38.7 per cent of the total for the country in 1850, and 31.3 per cent in 1920, but its proportion of the increase during the 70-year period was only 29.3 per cent. During recent decades, however, the disparity has not been so great. In fact, between 1900 and 1910 the difference between the proportion of the increase and the proportion of the total population was less for the South than for the North.

TABLE 7.—PER CENT DISTRIBUTION OF TOTAL POPULATION AND OF INCREASE, BY SECTIONS AND DIVISIONS: 1910-1920, 1900-1910, AND 1850-1920.

Ten states—Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts,
New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Rh

South Dakota, and Wyoming—took state censuses in 1915. In the case of Iowa the enumeration related to December 31, 1914, and in the cases of the other states the census dates ranged from March 1 to July 1. The provisions of law under which these state censuses were taken and the practices followed in making the enumerations varied greatly. The returns in certain cases were made up by local assessors, incidentally to the performance of other duties, and were admittedly more or less inaccurate or incomplete. In other states, however, the work was done by enumerators especially appointed for the purpose, and the reports are detailed and accurate.*

* The following table shows, for each of the 10 states which took a census in 1915, the population in 1920 and 1910 as ascertained at the Federal censuses, and in 1915 as ascertained at the state census, together with the numbers and rates of increase for the 5-year periods 1910-1915 and 1915-1920:

It will be seen that, for the 10 states taken as a group, the increase between 1915 and 1920 was somewhat less than that between 1910 and 1915; that in the cases of New Jersey and New York there was no great difference between the increases during the two 5-year periods; that for Florida, Iowa, Massachusetts, North Dakota, and Rhode Island the increases were much smaller between 1915 and 1920 than during the preceding 5 years; and that Kansas, South Dakota, and Wyoming show decreases between 1910 and 1915, followed by increases. The decline in the rates of increase in Massachusetts and Rhode Island is readily . . . . . immigration, which had been an in . . . . .

The North, with 60.2 per cent of the total population of the United States in 1920, comprises only 30.9 per cent of the total area. The corresponding proportions for the South are far less divergent, being 31.3 per cent for population and 29.8 per cent for area. For the West, in which only 8.4 per cent of the total population of the United States was enumerated in 1920, the proportion of the total area is 39.3 per cent. The region east of the Mississippi River, with 70 per cent of the population in 1920, occupies only 29.1 per cent of the area of the country, whereas the region west of the Mississippi, with 30 per cent of the population, comprises 70.9 per cent of the area.

Table 14 shows, for each state and territory in continental United States, the total land area at each census from 1790 to 1920, inclusive.

EXPLANATORY NOTES REGARDING ORGANIZATION OF STATES AND CHANGES IN AREA—Continued.

ARKANSAS.—Organized as a territory in 1819 from part of Missouri territory; then included greater part of present area of Oklahoma; admitted as a state in 1836. (See note 5.)

CALIFORNIA.—Ceded by Mexico in 1818; admitted as a state in 1850.

DECREASE OF 410 square miles due to overflow of Colorado River into Salton Sea.

INCREASE OF 192 square miles due to reclamation of part of Lake Tulare, Calif.

COLORADO.—Organized as a territory in 1861 from parts of territories of Utah, New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska; admitted as a state in 1876. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1861.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Formed in 1791 from parts of Maryland and Virginia; part south of Potomac retroceded to Virginia in 1800.

INCREASE OF 2 square miles due to reclamation of Potomac River Flats in District of Columbia.

FLORIDA.—Purchased from Spain in 1819; territorial government established in 1822; admitted as a state in 1845. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1822.

GEORGIA.—Included, in 1800, area now constituting northern parts of Alabama and Mississippi; in 1790, greater part of present area of those states.

IDAHO.—Organized in 1849 from parts of territories of Washington, Dakota, and Nebraska; area reduced in 1864 by organization of Montana territory and in 1866 by organization of Wyoming territory; 6 square miles transferred to Montana in 1878; admitted as a state in 1890.

ILLINOIS.—Formed as a territory in 1809 from part of Indiana territory, then included part of Upper Peninsula of Michigan; admitted as a state in 1818.

INCREASE OF 41 square miles due to drainage of lakes and swamps.

INDIANA.—Formed as a territory in 1800 from part of Territory Northwest of the Ohio River; then included area now constituting Illinois, Wisconsin, western and northern Michigan, northeastern and northern Minnesota, eastern and northern North Dakota, and small section of northeastern South Dakota; area shown for 1890 includes part of present area of Illinois; admitted as a state in 1816.

INCREASE OF 100 square miles due to drainage of lakes and swamps.

IOWA.—Organized in 1838 from part of Wisconsin territory; then included area now constituting that part of Minnesota lying west of the Mississippi River, and those parts of North and South Dakota lying east of the Missouri and White Earth Rivers; admitted as a state in 1846.

KANSAS.—Organized as a territory in 1854 from unorganized territory originally part of Louisiana Purchase; then included part of present area of Colorado; admitted as a state in 1861. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1861.

KENTUCKY.—Organized as a state from part of Virginia and admitted to Union in 1792. Area given for 1790 refers to 1792.

LOUISIANA.—Organized as a territory in 1804 from part of Indiana territory; then included area now constituting Louisiana; admitted as a state in 1812. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1812.

MAINE.—Under jurisdiction of Massachusetts until 1820, when admitted to Union as a separate state.

MARYLAND.—Area reduced in 1791 by formation of District of Columbia.

MICHIGAN.—Organized as a territory in 1805 from part of Indiana territory; then included part of Upper Peninsula of Michigan; admitted as a state in 1837.

MINNESOTA.—Organized as a territory in 1849 from unorganized area formerly within limits of Iowa and Wisconsin territories; then included area now constituting North and South Dakota east of Missouri and White Earth Rivers. Admitted as a state in 1858.

MISSISSIPPI.—Organized as a territory in 1808 from part of Georgia territory; then included area now constituting parts of North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado; area greatly reduced in 1861 by organization of Montana territory and in 1866 by organization of Wyoming territory; 6 square miles transferred to Montana in 1878; admitted as a state in 1848.

DECREASE OF 70 square miles due to building of several reservoirs in connection with irrigation projects.

NEBRASKA.—Organized in 1854 from unorganized territory, originally part of Louisiana Purchase; then included area now constituting parts of North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado; area greatly reduced in 1861 by organization of Montana territory and in 1866 by organization of Wyoming territory; 6 square miles transferred to Montana in 1878; admitted as a state in 1890.

NEVADA.—Organized as a territory in 1863 from part of Utah territory; then included area now constituting Nevada; admitted as a state in 1864. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1864.

NEW MEXICO.—Organized as a territory in 1819; at time of organization included area of Colorado, Arizona north of Gila River, and New Mexico; admitted as a state in 1890.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Organized as a state from part of Dakota territory and admitted to Union in 1889. (See note 61.)

OKLAHOMA.—Organized in 1906 as a territory from part of Indian Territory; organized as a state from Oklahoma territory and Indian Territory and admitted to Union in 1907.

OREGON.—Organized as a territory in 1859 from part of Oregon territory; then included area now constituting northern Idaho and Montana west of crest of Rocky Mountains; area extended in 1859 by addition of southern Idaho and Wyoming west of crest of Rocky Mountains; area reduced to present limits in 1863; admitted as a state in 1859.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Includes 311 square miles ceded to the United States by New York in 1781 and sold to Pennsylvania in 1792.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Organized as a state from part of Dakota territory and admitted to Union in 1889. (See note 61.)

TENNESSEE.—Organized as a territory in 1790 from part of Virginia territory; then included area now constituting Tennessee; admitted as a state in 1796.

TEXAS.—Independent republic of Texas annexed and admitted to Union as a state in 1845. Then included area now constituting portions of New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and small part of southern Wyoming. Present boundaries established in 1850.

UTAH.—Organized as a territory in 1850 from region ceded by Mexico in 1818; then included area now constituting western Colorado, southwestern Wyoming, and greater part of Nevada; area reduced by organization of Colorado and Nevada territories in 1861 and Idaho territory in 1863, by transfers of territory to Nevada in 1864 and 1866, and by organization of Wyoming territory in 1868, leaving Utah with present boundaries. Area shown for 1890 refers to 1861. Admitted as a state in 1896.

VERMONT.—Independent republic of Vermont admitted to Union as a state in 1791.

VIRGINIA.—Area shown for 1790 excludes area of Kentucky, organized from Virginia in 1792; area reduced in 1791 by formation of District of Columbia; in 1800 part of District of Columbia south of Potomac River retroceded to Virginia; area shown for 1800 and prior years includes present area of West Virginia, admitted as a separate state in 1863.

WASHINGTON.—Organized as a territory in 1854 from part of Oregon territory; then included area now constituting northern Idaho and Montana west of crest of Rocky Mountains; area extended in 1859 by addition of southern Idaho and Wyoming west of crest of Rocky Mountains; area reduced to present limits in 1863; admitted as a state in 1889.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Formed from part of Virginia and admitted as a state in 1863.

WISCONSIN.—Organized as a territory in 1836 from part of Michigan territory; then included area now constituting Wisconsin; admitted as a state in 1836.

WYOMING.—Organized as a territory in 1890 from Dakota and Idaho territories; admitted as a state in 1890.

DECREASE OF 16 square miles due to building of Pathfinder and Shoshone Reservoirs.

REGION BETWEEN OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI RIVERS AND GREAT LAKES, TOGETHER WITH DRAINAGE BASIN OF RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.—Included in 1800 as part of Indiana territory; then included area now constituting Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, northeastern and northern Indiana, and eastern North Dakota, and small section of northeastern South Dakota. Area greatly reduced by organization of Indiana territory in 1800. Area shown for 1800 excludes that of Ohio, admitted as a state in 1803.

CEDED TO UNITED STATES IN 1787 BY SOUTH CAROLINA, INCLUDED IN TERRITORY SOUTH OF THE RIVER OHIO FROM 1790 TO 1798; NOW IN NORTHERN GEORGIA, MISSISSIPPI, AND ALABAMA. (See note 17.)

AREA WEST OF PRESENT WEST TERRITORY OF IDAHO IN 1863.—Included in 1863 as part of Idaho territory; then included area now constituting Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado; area greatly reduced in 1861 by organization of Montana territory and in 1866 by organization of Wyoming territory; 6 square miles transferred to Montana in 1878; admitted as a state in 1890.

AREA WEST OF PRESENT WEST TERRITORY OF IDAHO IN 1863.—Included in 1863 as part of Idaho territory; then included area now constituting Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado; area greatly reduced in 1861 by organization of Montana territory and in 1866 by organization of Wyoming territory; 6 square miles transferred to Montana in 1878; admitted as a state in 1890.

POPULATION PER SQUARE MILE.

United States as a whole.—Table 15 shows, for the United States exclusive of outlying possessions, the total population, land area in square miles, and density of population, or population per square mile of land area, at each census from 1790 to 1920; and the diagram below also shows the density of population at each census.

The decrease in density between 1800 and 1810 and between 1840 and 1850 was due in each case to large accessions of sparsely populated territory. With these exceptions, the number of inhabitants per square mile has increased during each decade from 4.5 in 1790 to 35.5 in 1920.

TABLE 15.—POPULATION PER SQUARE MILE, FOR THE UNITED STATES, EXCLUSIVE OF OUTLYING POSSESSIONS: 1790-1920.

POPULATION PER SQUARE MILE: 1790-1920.

Divisions and states.—The population per square mile in the United States and in each state and territory at each census from 1790 to 1920, inclusive, is shown in Table 18 (p. 31). In preparing this table the population of each state or territory as returned at a given census has been divided by the land area in square miles of the state or territory as constituted at the time that census was taken. This in certain cases differed greatly from the present area of the state, and in some instances the enumerators did not canvass the entire area of a territory. For example, in 1850 the greater part of the region now constituting Arizona was a part of the territory of New Mexico, but was not canvassed by the enumerators. In computing the density of population of New Mexico in 1850, however, the total land area of the territory as then constituted has been used as the divisor.

POPULATION PER SQUARE MILE, BY STATES: 1920 AND 1910.

Table 16 shows, for each geographic division and each state, the population and land area in 1920 and the density of population, or population per square mile, for each of the last three censuses. The density of population for the last two censuses is shown also by the diagram above and by the maps on page 30. The density of population for counties in 1920 is indicated by the map headed "Population per square mile, by counties: 1920," on page 88.

TABLE 16.—POPULATION PER SQUARE MILE, BY DIVISIONS AND STATES: 1920, 1910, and 1900.

Table 17 lists the states (disregarding the District of Columbia) in the order of their density of population in 1920.

In five states the density of population in 1920 was more than 200 per square mile; in five other states, between 100 and 200; in one state, slightly more than 80; in 26 states, between 15 and 65; and in 11 states, less than 10.

The combined population (42,453,437) of the 10 states having more than 100 inhabitants per square mile and of the District of Columbia in 1920 constituted slightly more than two-fifths (40.2 per cent) of the total population of the United States, while their combined land area (222,675 square miles) represented hardly more than one-fourteenth (7.5 per cent) of the entire land area of the country.

The 11 states having fewer than 10 inhabitants per square mile are all west of the Mississippi River, 8 being in the Mountain division (constituting its entire area), 2 in the West North Central division, and 1 in the Pacific division. The combined land area of these 11 states (1,101,667 square miles) forms almost three-eighths (37 per cent) of the entire land area of the United States, while their combined population (5,402,909) represented only about one-twentieth (5.1 per cent) of the total population of the country in 1920.

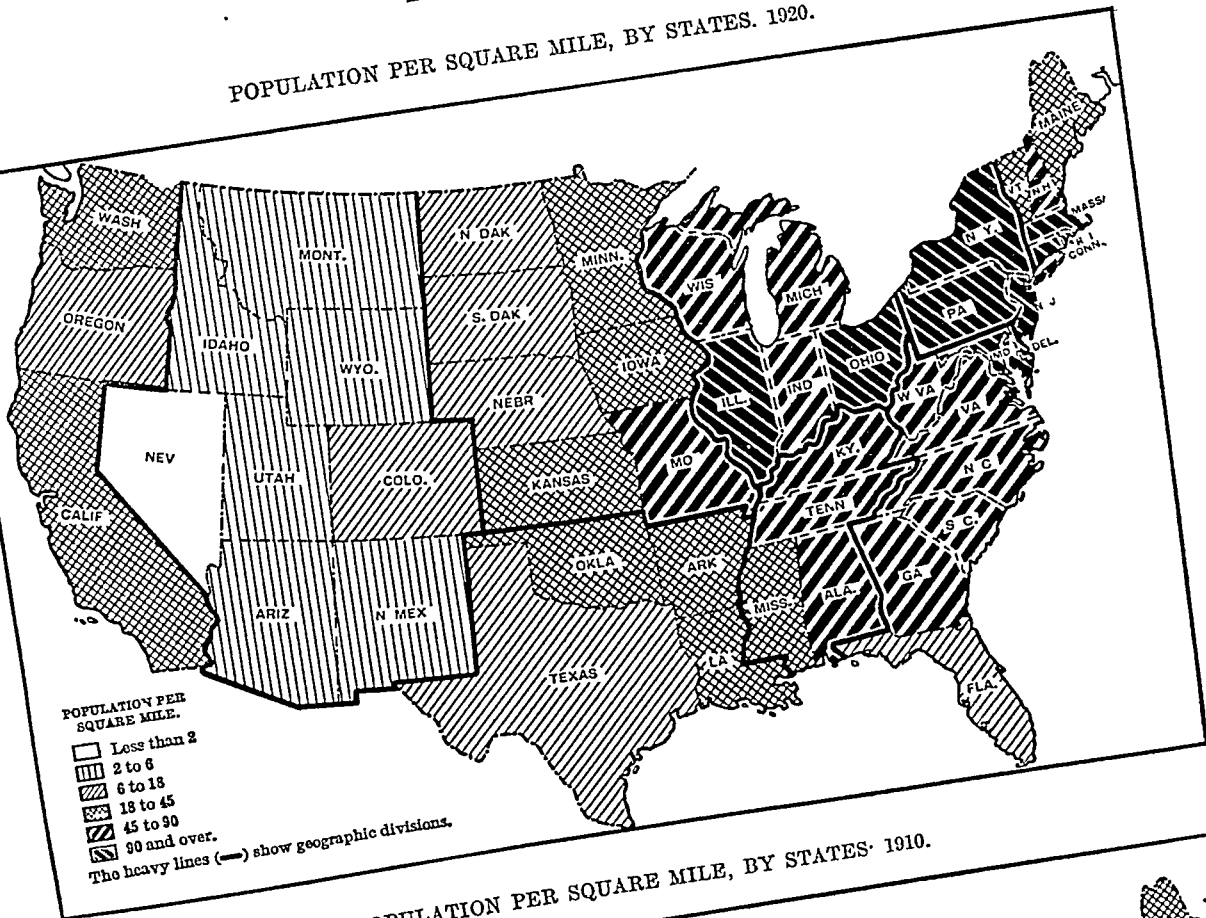

The density of population of the several outlying possessions in 1920 was as follows: Alaska, one-tenth of 1 per square mile; American Samoa, 104.6; Guam, 63.2; Hawaii, 39.7; Panama Canal Zone,<sup>1</sup> 64; Porto Rico, 378.4; Philippine Islands,<sup>2</sup> 90; Virgin Islands,<sup>1</sup> 197.4. The density of population of Alaska is only about one-seventh as great as that for Nevada, the most sparsely populated state. American Samoa is nearly as densely populated as Delaware; Guam and the Panama Canal Zone may be compared with Michigan; Hawaii, with Louisiana; Porto Rico, with New Jersey; the Philippine Islands, with Indiana; and the Virgin Islands, with Pennsylvania.

<sup>1</sup> In calculating the density of population for the Panama Canal Zone and for the Virgin Islands the land area has been used, but for the other outlying possessions the land area has not been computed, and the density figures are therefore based on the gross area. The density stated for the Virgin Islands refers to Nov. 1, 1917.

On the basis of the Fourteenth Census returns the center of population and the median point for the United States have been determined for January 1, 1920. In these calculations no account is taken of the area and population of Alaska and of other outlying territory. The location of the center at the dates of the several censuses from 1790 to 1920 and the movement of the point from census to census are indicated by the tables and maps of this section, which includes also a map on which are drawn the median parallel of latitude and the median meridian of longitude for 1920.

<sup>1</sup> Definition of terms.—The term "center of population" as used in census publications has a somewhat technical significance, different from that frequently attached to it. The center is often understood to be the point of intersection of a north and south line which divides the population equally, with an east and west line which likewise divides it equally. This point of intersection is, in a certain sense, a center of population; it is here, however, designated the median point to distinguish it from the point technically defined as the center.

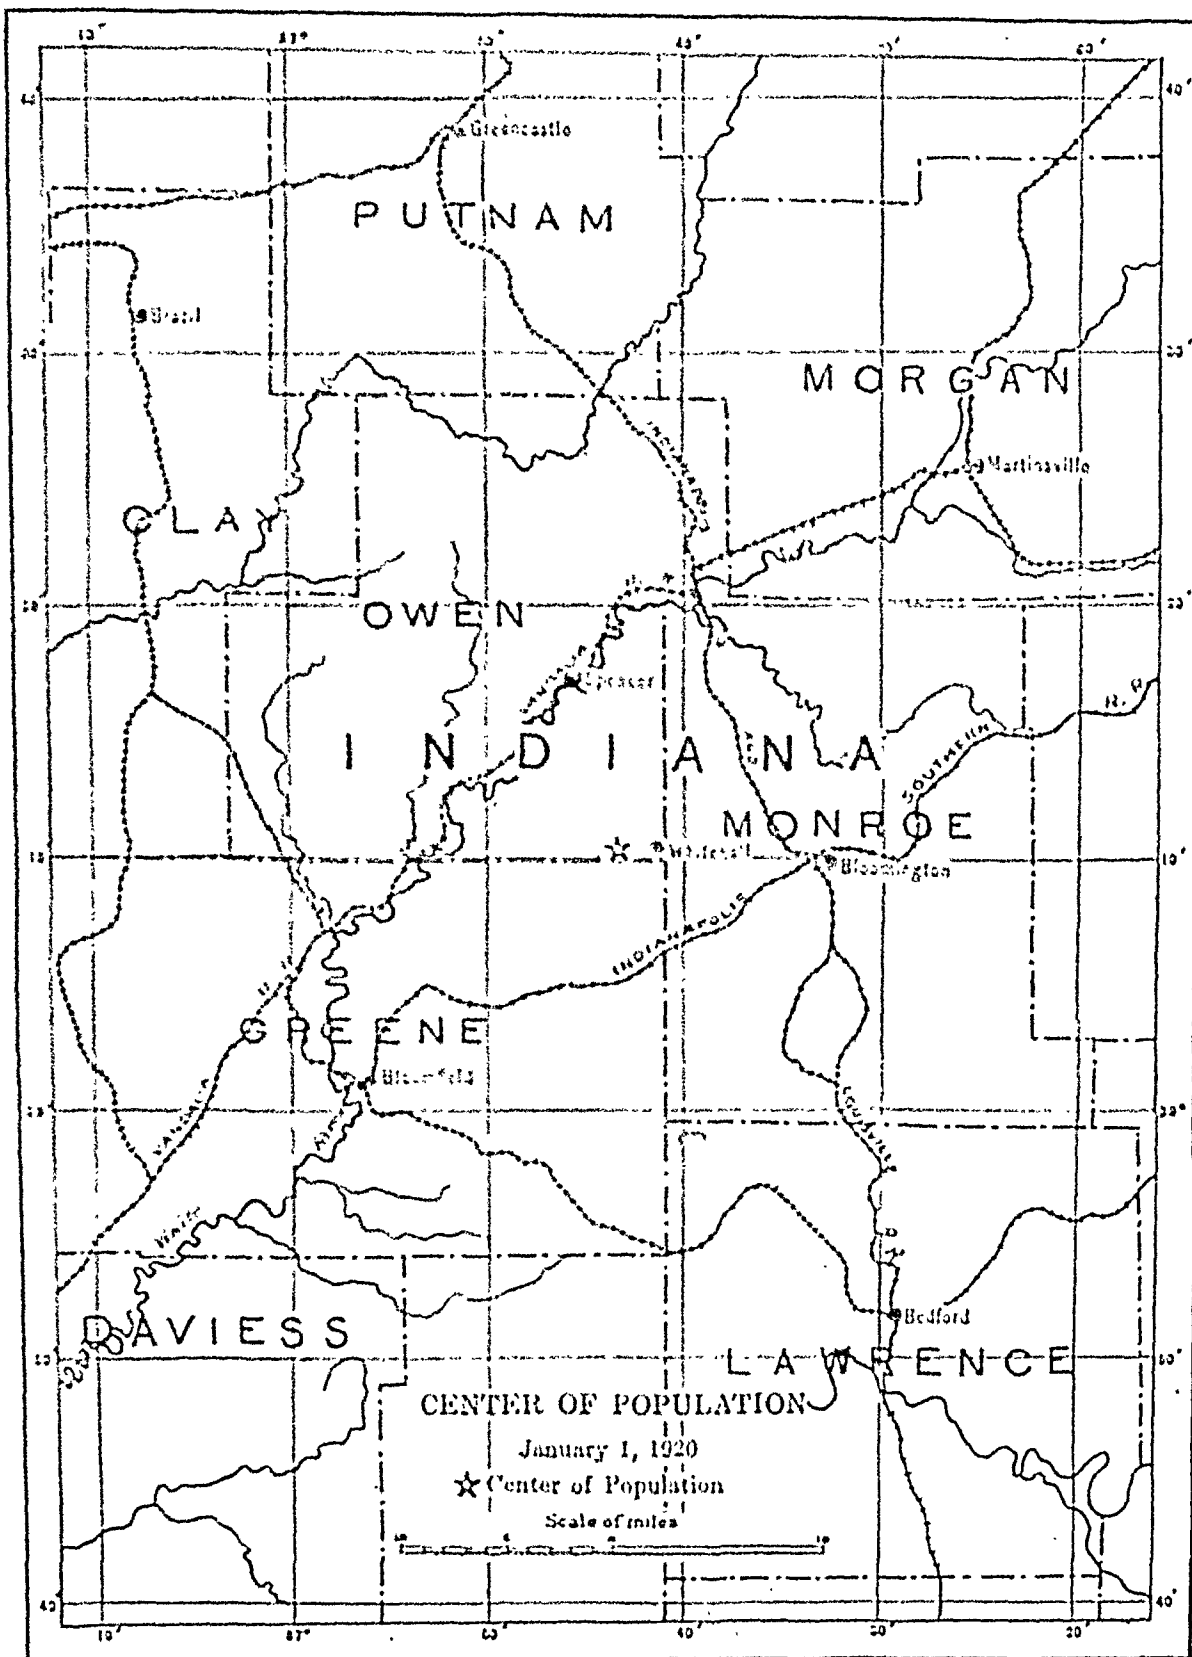

The center of population may be said to represent the center of gravity of the population. If the surface of the United States be considered as a rigid level plane without weight, capable of sustaining the population distributed thereon, individuals being assumed to be on a pivotal point, the influence of each individual in the plane would be directly proportional to his distance from the pivotal point or center of gravity. This is the point referred to by the term "center of population" as used in this chapter. The median point, on the other hand, is in no sense a center of gravity, as the numerical center of population. In point, distance is not taken into account, and the units of population is considered only in relation to the intersecting median lines—as being north or south of the median parallel and east or west of the median meridian. Extensive changes in the geographic distribution of the population may take place without affecting the median point, whereas the center of population responds to the slightest population change in any section of the country. To illustrate, since the median point lies east of Minnesota, a million persons could move from Minnesota to Oregon without affecting the median point, while the removal of 500 persons from one town in Indiana to another, across the north and south line passing through the median point, would change the location of the point. On the other hand, the removal of a million persons from Minnesota to Oregon would have a very considerable effect on the center of population, since, in terms of the above analogy, the influence of each individual in maintaining the equilibrium of the plane would increase in proportion to his distance from the center of gravity. If all the people in the United States were to be assembled at one place, the center of population would be the point which they could reach with the minimum aggregate travel, assuming that they all traveled in direct lines from their residences to the meeting place. This would not be true of the median point.

Method of determining the center of population.—In locating the center of population it is first assumed to be approximately at a certain point. Through this point a parallel and a meridian are drawn, crossing the entire country. In determining the center of population in 1920 the same point was selected as in 1910, namely, the intersection of the parallel of 39 degrees north latitude with the meridian of 86 degrees west longitude, which lines were taken as the axes of moments.

The product of the population of a given area by its distance from the assumed parallel is called a north or south moment, and the product of the population of the area by its distance from the assumed meridian is called an east or west moment. In calculating north and south moments the distances are measured in minutes of latitude; in calculating east and west moments it is necessary to use miles, on account of the unequal length of the degrees and minutes of longitude in different latitudes. The population of the country is grouped by "square degrees"—that is, by areas included between consecutive parallels and meridians—as they are convenient units with which to work.

It is then deducted from that which they lie, and treated separately. At each square degree is assumed to be at its geographical center, except where such an assumption is manifestly incorrect; in these cases the position of the center of population of the square degree is estimated as nearly as possible. The population of each square degree north or south of the assumed parallel is multiplied by the distance of its center from that parallel; a similar calculation is made for the principal cities; and the sum of the north moments and the sum of the south moments are ascertained. The difference between these two sums, divided by the total population of the country, gives a correction to the latitude. In a similar manner the sums of the east and of the west moments are ascertained and from them the correction in longitude is made.

Center of population: 1920.—At the Fourteenth Census the center of population was in the following position:

Latitude.....39° 10' 21" N.
Longitude.....86° 43' 15" W.

This point is in southwestern Indiana, in Owen County, 1.9 miles west of Whitehall, Clay township, and 8.3 miles south-southeast of Spencer, Washington township, as shown by the map on page 33.

During the last decade, 1910 to 1920, the center of population moved westward 10' 55", approximately 9.8 miles, and northward 9", or approximately two-tenths of a mile. This was the least movement ever made by the center of population in any decade since 1790, and was only about one-fourth as great as its movement between 1900 and 1910. (See Table 20, below.) The increase in the population of New York, Pennsylvania, and certain other states north of the thirty-ninth parallel has substantially counterbalanced the increase in Texas, Oklahoma, and southern California. The advance toward the west is due largely to the increase in the population of the Pacific Coast states—particularly California, whose population was greater by more than 1,000,000 in 1920 than in 1910—their distance from the center giving any increase of population in those states much greater weight than an equal increase in the populous eastern states, which are nearer the center. The cities of Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, with a combined population of 1,398,601, exert a greater influence on the location of the center of population than the cities of Baltimore, Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh, with a combined population of 5,197,624.

The northward movement of the center of population since 1900 has been very slight, having amounted to only about nine-tenths of a mile.

Location of center at prior censuses.—Table 20 and the map on page 35 show the location of the center of population and its proximity to important places at each Federal census.

In the period of 130 years, from 1790 to 1920, the center of population advanced westward 567 miles from its position in 1790, 23 miles east of Baltimore. The progress westward from census to census has been uninterrupted, being greatest, 80.6 miles, during the decade 1850–1860, and least, 9.8 miles, during the decade 1910–1920.

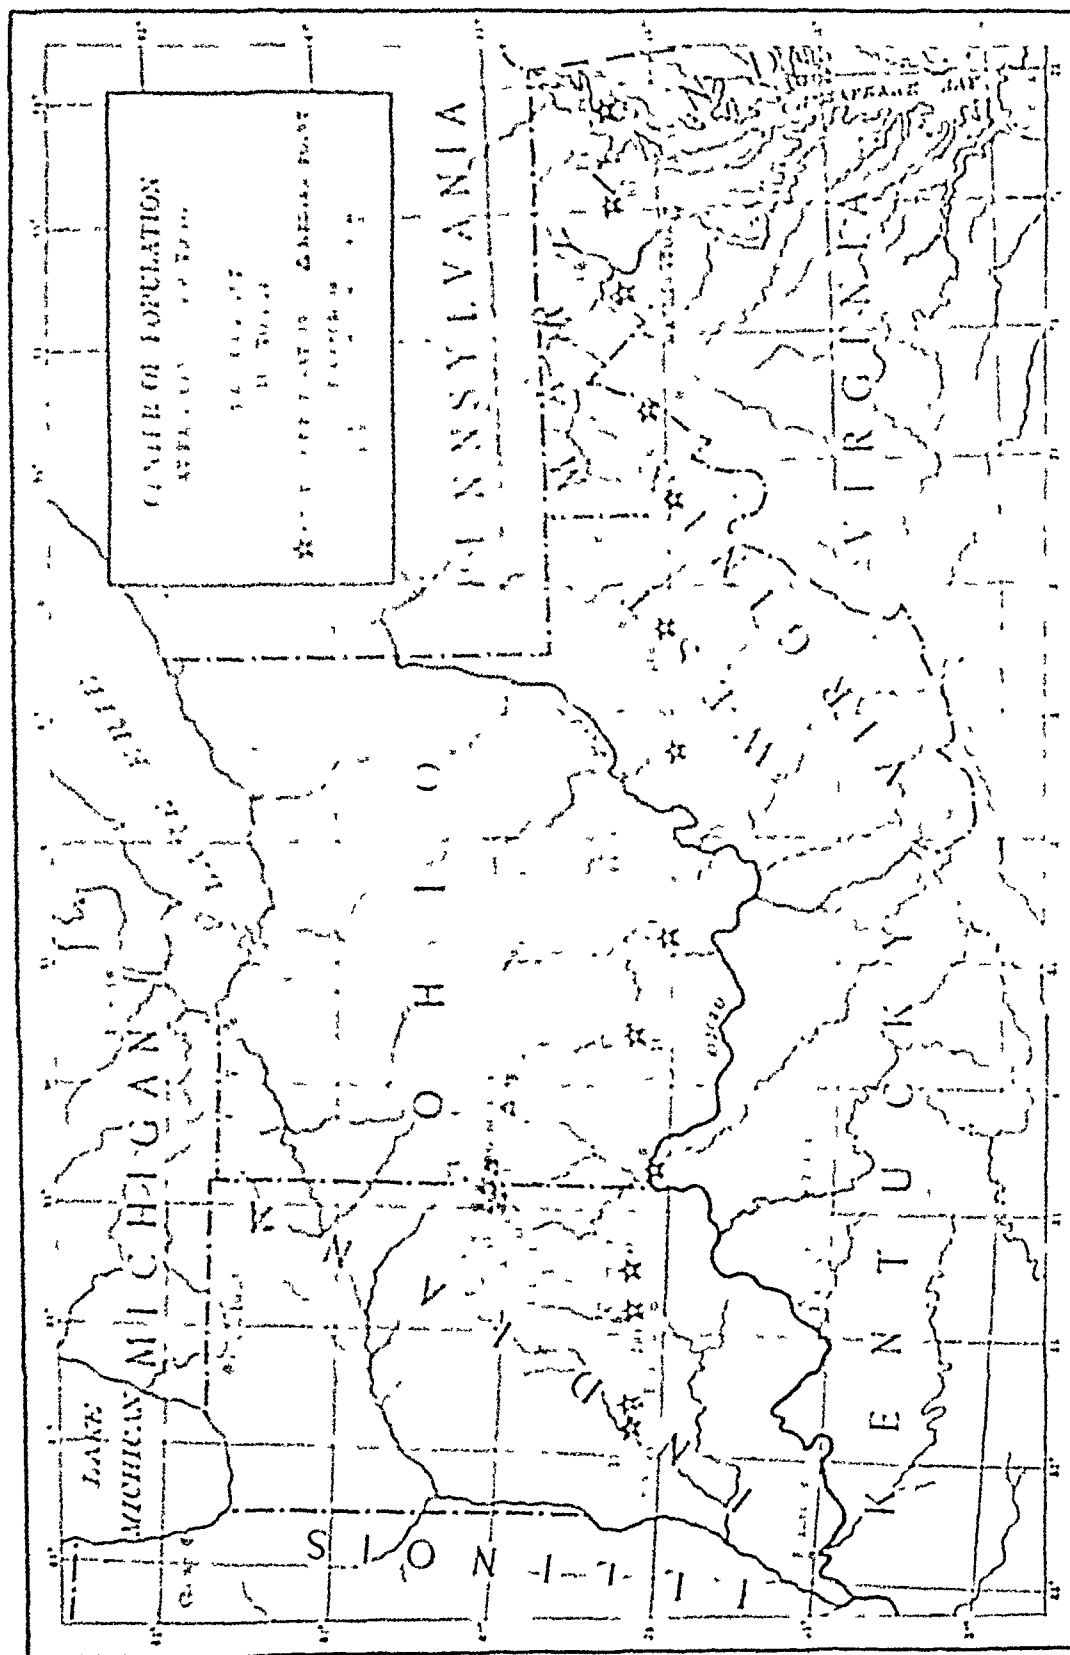

The net advance southward during this period of 130 years was only 7.5 miles. The position of the center in 1790 was the extreme northern point, and the position in 1830, the extreme southern point, occupied at any of the several censuses from 1790 to 1920, the distance separating the parallels passing through these points being only 21.5 miles. The closeness with which the center throughout its progress westward has clung to the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude is remarkable. In 1790 it was less than 20 miles north of this parallel, and in 1830 less than 2.5 miles south of it.

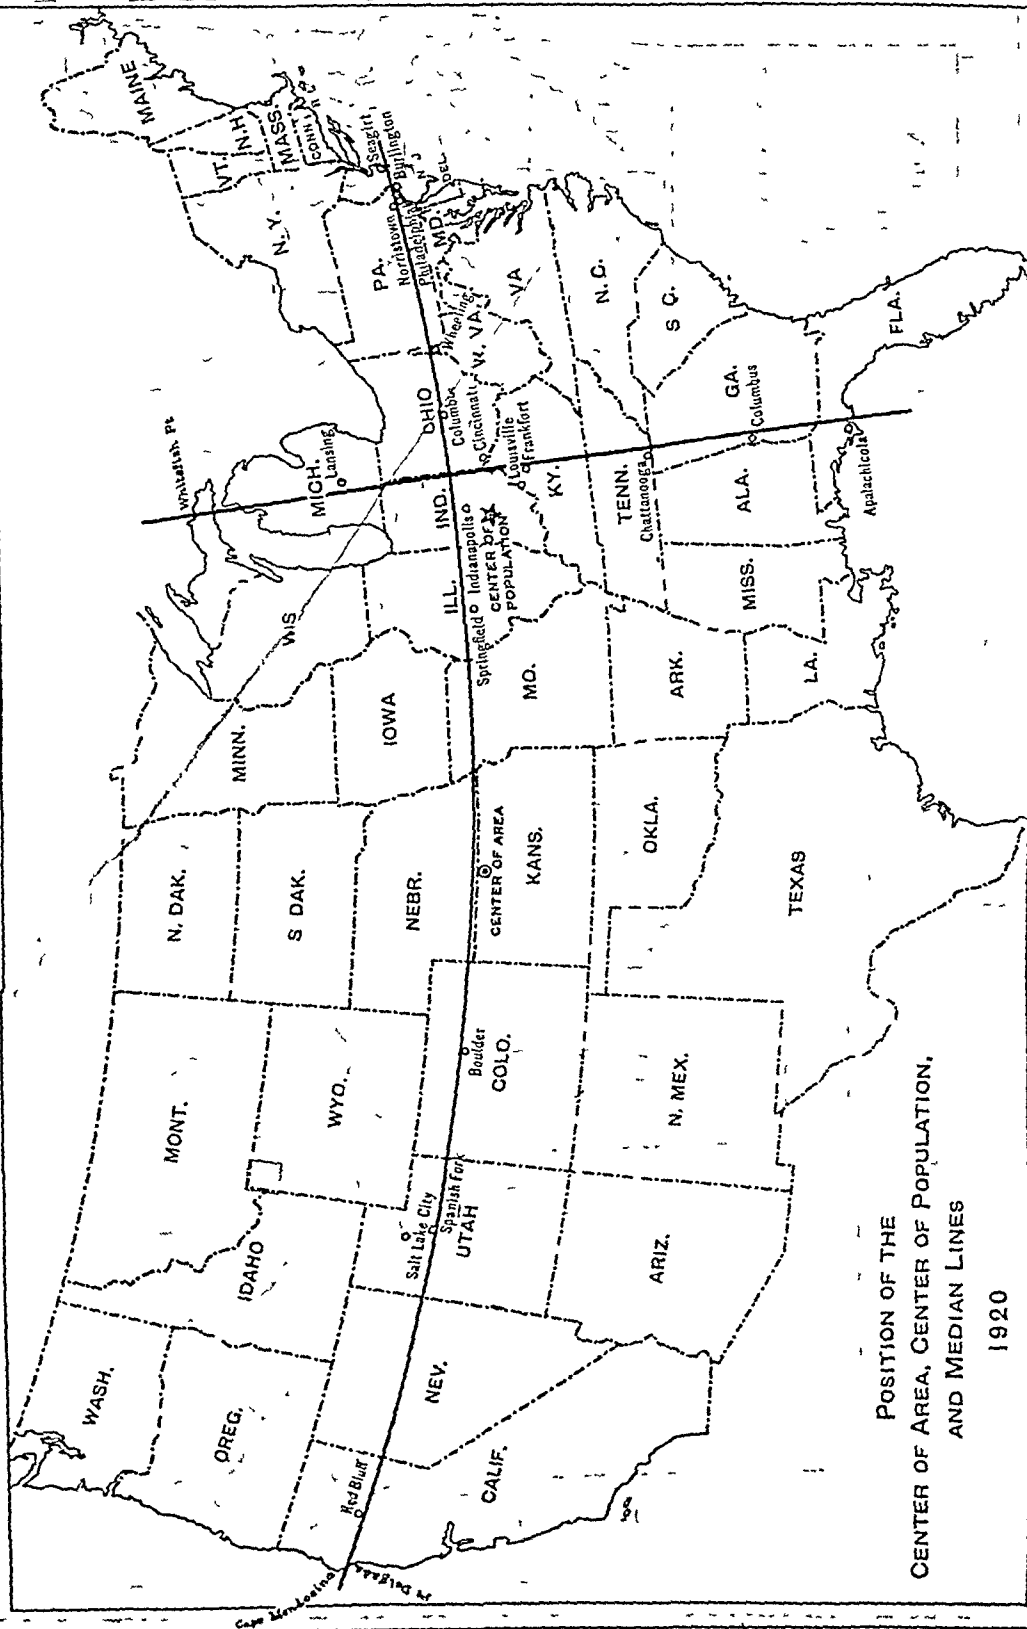

In each of the first four decades, from 1790 to 1830, the center moved westward and southward, the aggregate advance westward during this period of 40 years being 166.6 miles, and the aggregate advance southward, as noted above, 21.5 miles. During the nine decades from 1830 to 1920 the center of population moved northward and southward, but considering the period as a whole the net deviation from the course due west was very slight. The aggregate advance westward during this period of 90 years was 400.4 miles, while the net advance northward was only 14.1 miles. In traversing this distance the deviations north and south from a course due west were confined to the very narrow range of 16.1 miles.

POSITION OF THE
CENTER OF AREA, CENTER OF POPULATION, AND MEDIAN LINES

Center of area.—In connection with the location of the center of population it is of interest to note also the position of what may be termed the center of area—that is, the point on which the surface of the United States would balance if it were a plane of uniform weight per unit of area. This point is located in northern Kansas, 10 miles north of Smith Center, the county seat of Smith County (approximate latitude  $39^{\circ} 55'$ , longitude  $98^{\circ} 50'$ ), and is therefore about three-fourths of a degree (51 miles) north and about  $12\frac{1}{2}$  degrees (647 miles) west of the center of population. Its location is shown by the map on page 36. This would be the center of population if the inhabitants of the United States were distributed uniformly throughout its territory. In locating the center of area, no account is taken of Alaska and other outlying possessions.

Median lines.—The geographic distribution of the population is also indicated by the location of median lines. A parallel of latitude is determined which divides the country in such a manner that half the population is north of that parallel and half is south of it; and, similarly, a meridian of longitude is determined which evenly divides the population east and west.<sup>2</sup>

During the four decades from 1880 to 1920 there was little change in the location of the median parallel, its movement being so slight that it could not be accurately indicated on a small map. The movement of the median meridian, however, was much greater. During the 30 years from 1880 to 1910 this movement amounted to 45 miles, the westward progress of the meridian being uninterrupted, although diminishing from decade to decade; but between 1910 and 1920 a reverse movement took place, with the result that the position of the meridian in the later year was 8.8 miles east of its position in 1910. This eastward movement was due entirely to the relatively considerable increase in the population of the Atlantic Coast states.

TABLE 21.—MEDIAN LINES. 1880-1920.

CENSUS YEAR.	Median parallel, north latitude.	Median meridian, west longitude.	MOVEMENT IN MILES DURING PRECEDING DECADE

1880.....	39 57 00	84 7 12	.....	.....	.....
1890.....	40 2 51	84 40 1	6.6	27 0	.....
1900.....	40 4 22	84 51 29	2 4	10.8	.....
1910.....	40 6 24	84 59 59	2 3	7 5	.....
1920.....	40 6 25	84 49 59	0 019	.....	8 8

The latitude and longitude of the median lines at the several censuses from 1880 to 1920 are shown by Table 21, and their location in 1920 is indicated on the map on page 35.

It may be observed that while each median line exactly bisects the population as a whole it does not necessarily bisect the population at any given point or through any given section of its course. The median parallel does not bisect even approximately the population living either east or west of the Mississippi River. Similarly, the median meridian does not bisect the population of either the northern or the southern section of the country. As the result, no one of the four sections into which the intersecting median lines divide the country contains exactly or approximately one-quarter of the total population. The diagonally opposite sections, however, are necessarily exactly equal in population.<sup>1</sup> The population of the northeastern section equals that of the southwestern, and, similarly, the population of the southeastern equals that of the northwestern. The northeastern and southwestern sections each contain, in fact, a population of approximately 31,450,000, while the southeastern and northwestern sections each have about 21,400,000 inhabitants.

Median point.—The point at which the median lines described in the preceding paragraph intersect is designated as the "median point" of the population. It is, in other words, the junction of the line dividing the population equally north and south with the line dividing it equally east and west, and is, therefore, a point quite distinct from the center of population and having no definite or fixed relation to it. As already indicated, the changes in the median point reflect only the difference between the growth of population east of it and the growth west of it and the difference between the growth north and south of it. Other differences in relative growth do not affect its location.

$$A+B=\frac{1}{2} \text{ population of U. S.}$$

$$B+C=\frac{1}{2} \text{ population of U. S.}$$

$$A+B=B+C.$$

$$\text{Therefore } A=C.$$

Similarly it may be proven that  $B=D$ .

<sup>2</sup> In locating these median lines it is necessary, in case of the "square degrees" of latitude and longitude which are traversed by the lines themselves, to assume that the population is evenly distributed throughout these square degrees or to make an estimated adjustment where this is obviously not the case.

In 1920 the median point was located at latitude  $40^{\circ} 6' 25''$  north and longitude  $84^{\circ} 49' 59''$  west, 6 miles slightly west of south of Union City, Randolph County, Ind. Its eastward movement during the decade was 8.8 miles and its northward movement nineteen-thousandths of a mile. Comparing its movement since 1910 with that of the center of population, it will be noted that while each moved slightly to the northward, the center of population moved westward 9.8 miles, as against an eastward movement of 3.8 miles on the part of the median point. These opposite movements bring out strikingly the difference between the significance of the center of population and that of the median point. The calculations to determine the location of the two points are made on entirely different bases, and the results are not comparable. The effect of the increase of 1,000,000 in the population of California was much less on the location of the median point than on that of the center of population, for the reason that in determining the location of the center of population the size of each of the various population groups and both its distance and direction from the center are taken into account, whereas in the case of the median point only the size of the group and its direction from the point are considered. The median point in 1920 was situated 121 miles to the northeast of the center of population.

The exact position of the median point in 1920 is shown by the median lines on the map on page 36, and its location at each of the last five censuses is indicated by the map on page 35. Its approximate location with reference to certain places was as follows:

In 1880, 16 miles due west of Springfield, Ohio.

In 1890, 5 miles southwest of Greenville, Ohio.

In 1900, in Spartanburg, Randolph County, Ind.

In 1910, 3 miles south of Winchester, Ind.

In 1920, 6 miles slightly west of south of Union City, Ind.

POPULATION OF COUNTIES.

The primary divisions of the several states constituting continental United States are, in general, termed counties, but in Louisiana these divisions are known as parishes. There are also a few cities which are independent of the county organizations and thus constitute primary divisions of the states, namely, Baltimore in Maryland, St. Louis in Missouri, and 20 cities in Virginia. There are no counties in the District of Columbia the county organization having been abolished in 1874. The total number of counties or equivalent divisions in continental United States in 1920 was 3065.

Tables 2-25 present statistics as to increases and decrease in population within identical county areas between 1910 and 1920. In these tables the number of areas considered is only 2,874, made up as follows: 239 individual counties; 63 combinations of two or more counties, comprising a total of 234 counties; 2 independent cities (Baltimore and St. Louis); and 20 combinations of independent cities in Virginia with the counties in which located. The 63 combinations of two or more counties have been made for the purpose of showing the true rates of increase or decrease within identical areas in cases where new counties were formed from parts of others between 1910 and 1920. (Mere transfers of territory from one county to another have been disregarded, since the areas thus transferred are, as a rule, small in proportion to the areas of the entire counties, the transfers having been made in many cases solely for the purpose of rectifying boundary lines.) The 20 combinations of independent cities in Virginia with the counties in which located have been made in order to secure statistics comparable with those for the counties in other states.

In 1,082 counties and combinations, representing 37.6 per cent of the total number considered, the population decreased during the decade 1910-1920.

These 1,082 counties and combinations had an aggregate area of 908,803 square miles, representing 30.6 per cent of the total land area of the United States. The extent of this area of decreasing population and the geographic distribution of the counties composing it are of significance when considered in conjunction with the relatively high rates of population growth during the decade in most urban communities and in a few of the rural districts.

Table 22 shows, by geographic sections and divisions, the distribution of the area of decreasing population.

Table 23 shows, by divisions and states, the aggregate area of the counties in which the population decreased.

Table 49, page 93, shows the population of the 48 states, by counties or equivalent divisions, for 1920 as shown by the returns of the Fourteenth Census, and for prior census years as far back as 1850 or the earliest year covered by any decennial census for a given county. The varying rates of increase in the population of counties from 1910 to 1920 are shown graphically by the map headed "Per cent of increase or decrease in total population, by counties: 1910-1920," on page 90.

URBAN AND RURAL POPULATION.

DEFINITION OF TERMS.

The Census Bureau classifies as urban population that residing in cities and other incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more, and in towns of that size in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island. In most sections of the country all or practically all densely populated areas having 2,500 inhabitants or more are incorporated separately as municipalities, variously known as cities, towns, villages, boroughs, etc. In the three New England states just named, however, this is not the case.

In Massachusetts and Rhode Island it is not the practice—as it is in practically all the other states—to incorporate, as separate municipalities, the relatively densely populated portions of "towns" (which are the primary divisions of the counties), and no town as a whole is incorporated as a municipality until it attains a population greatly in excess of 2,500. In New Hampshire a similar condition exists, although there are in the state two incorporated villages, each of which has fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. For this reason those towns having 2,500 or more inhabitants in the three states named are treated as urban, although portions of their areas are rural in character. The urban areas in the three states in question, as classified by the census, thus contain a certain number of inhabitants who in other sections of the country would be segregated as rural. Nevertheless, in most of the Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island towns having 2,500 inhabitants or more by far the greater part of the population resides within the more densely settled areas, so that the proportion classed as urban, considering each state as a whole, is not greatly exaggerated by the practice adopted. Statistics for individual counties in these states were omitted in Table 50, however, on account of the undoubted exaggeration in certain counties.

Urban population being thus defined, the remainder of the country is classed as rural, consisting of all unincorporated territory and all incorporated places having fewer than 2,500 inhabitants, except in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, where it consists of all towns under 2,500.

The statistics as to urban and rural population in this section relate only to the United States, exclusive of outlying possessions.

PROPORTIONS URBAN AND RURAL.

United States as a whole.—The proportions of the total population of the United States living in urban and in rural territory, as reported at each of the last five censuses, are shown in Table 26.

The rapid increase from census to census in the proportion which the urban population forms of the total, as shown by Table 26, is the continuation of a tendency which has been manifested conspicuously in the United States ever since 1820. It would be extremely difficult, if at all possible, even to approximate closely from the earlier census reports the population residing in urban territory as now defined, and therefore no such compilation has been attempted for censuses prior to that of 1880. The census report for 1880, however, contained a comparative statement showing the population living in places of 8,000 inhabitants or more at each census back to 1790; and, as affording an indication of the growth of urban population from the earliest to the latest census, so much of this statement as applies to the censuses prior to 1880 is reproduced in Table 27 in conjunction with comparable figures for the last five censuses, 1880 to 1920, covering the population of incorporated places (and of towns in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island) having the same-size limit, 8,000 inhabitants.

POPULATION IN PLACES OF 8,000 INHABITANTS OR MORE AT EACH CENSUS: 1790-1920.

It will be seen from Table 27 and from the accompanying diagram that in 1790 only about one-thirtieth of the population of the country resided in places having 8,000 inhabitants or more, but that the proportion which this class of the population formed of the total increased to nearly one-twentieth in 1810, one-eighth in 1850, almost one-third in 1900, and nearly four-ninths in 1920.

The following diagram shows the proportions urban—that is, residing in places having 2,500 inhabitants or more—and rural in the total population at each census from 1880 to 1920.

URBAN AND RURAL POPULATION: 1880-1920.

It will be noted that one division alone, the Middle Atlantic, contains more than three-tenths of the total urban population of the country, and that this division and the East North Central together contain considerably more than half the total urban population.

Table 29 shows, by geographic divisions, the density of the rural population in 1920. The density figures in this table have been based on the total land area, no deduction being made for areas classified as urban. Outside of New England the urban area in the divisional aggregates is too inconsiderable to have any material effect on the results; and since in New England the urban area is exaggerated only in the states of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, the resultant error in the figures for the division as a whole is not great.

The distribution, by states, of the rural population in 1920 is indicated by the map headed "Rural population per square mile, by counties: 1920," on page 89. In the preparation of this map the county has been taken as the unit; that is, the rural population of each county has been assumed to be uniformly distributed throughout the county.

Table 30 (p. 46) shows, by divisions and states, the urban and rural population as returned at the last four censuses. In the New England and Middle Atlantic divisions the proportions urban in the total population are much greater than in any other division, being, in 1920, approximately four-fifths and three-fourths, respectively. Among the individual states Rhode Island and Massachusetts rank first and second in this respect. It must be borne in mind, however, that the census method of classifying the urban and rural population in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire results in some exaggeration of the figures for the former class, as already pointed out. Among the divisions, the smallest proportions of urban population are found in the South, but the eight states having less than one-fifth of their population urban—North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, New Mexico, and Nevada—are scattered through the three southern divisions, the West North Central division, and the Mountain division.

It will be noted that, although the South is far more densely populated than the West (see Table 16), the urban element in its total population is proportionally much smaller than in the West. In fact, in each of the three southern divisions the urban proportion is smaller than in either of the two western divisions.

In every geographic division the proportion urban increased between 1910 and 1920, and the same is true of every state except Colorado, Montana, and Wyoming. Because of the decreases in these three states, the Mountain division as a whole shows a decidedly smaller increase in the proportion urban during the past decade than appears for any other division.

The maps on page 48 and the diagram in the next column show the per cent urban in the total population in 1920 and 1910, respectively, for each of the states, and the diagram on page 49 indicates the percentage of urban population in each census year from 1890 to 1920. As shown by the map and by Table 30, the proportion urban in the total population is now more than one-half in 15 states, namely, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Washington.

States and counties.—Table 50 (p. 150) shows, by states and counties, the urban and rural population for 1920, 1910, and 1900, together with the percentage which the urban population represented of the total in each year, the percentages of increase in each class, and the rural population per square mile in 1920.

COMMUNITIES CLASSIFIED ACCORDING TO SIZE.

United States as a whole.—In addition to classifying the population according to the broad groupings urban and rural, a further and more detailed analysis may be made by comparing the proportions of the total population residing in communities of specified size groups at each of the last four censuses. In making any study of this comparison, it must be kept in mind that the figures for a given group of cities at one census do not relate to exactly the same cities as those for the corresponding group at another census, since many places, as their population increases (or, in a few cases, decreases), pass from one group to another at successive censuses.

Table 31 shows, for the United States as a whole, the number of places constituting each of the specified classes at each of the last four censuses, the combined population of each group, and the percentage which the population of each group represented of the total for the country. Under the heading "Urban territory," which in the previous discussion has been considered as a unit, the communities of 2,500 inhabitants or more are subdivided, according to size, into nine classes of places, and the population of the rural territory is also subdivided by distinguishing the population of incorporated places having fewer than 2,500 inhabitants from that of unincorporated territory. The urban classes for 1920, 1910, and 1900 consist of incorporated municipalities in all parts of the country and of towns in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island. At the census of 1890 separate returns for urban communities were not confined to incorporated places, and, as the incorporated places were not distinguished from the unincorporated, the number of the former class can not be exactly determined for that year. The number of places having 2,500 or more inhabitants which are not incorporated as municipalities is, however, very small except in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island. For the urban class, therefore, the figures for 1890 are fairly comparable with those for the other census years covered by the table. In order to make the figures for incorporated places having fewer than 2,500 inhabitants in 1890 comparable with the corresponding figures for the more recent censuses, the number of such places in 1890 has been estimated according to the method adopted in compiling the census reports for 1900. (See note 3, Table 31.)

left, in 1920, 1910, and 1900, in the 10,000-25,000 class, and in 1890 in the 5,000-10,000 class; and Union City fell at each census from 1890 to 1920 in the 2,500-5,000 class.

the returns of the 1890 census, at not enumerated separately. It is incorporated. (See reports of the T. given for 1890 in this table for incorporated places having fewer than 2,500 inhabitants may, therefore, include the population of some unincorporated places and exclude that of some incorporated places.

It will be seen from Table 31 that, in addition to the 51.4 per cent of the total population which in 1920 resided in communities classed by the Census Bureau as urban, 8.5 per cent resided in incorporated places having fewer than 2,500 inhabitants, the aggregate for the two classes being 63,273,844, or 59.9 per cent of the total population. Although this aggregate does not include the population residing in unincorporated villages, it approximates the total of what may be described as the agglomerated population of the country. The population living in rural territory outside of incorporated places—numbering 42,436,770 and constituting 40.1 per cent of the total—although it includes a small proportion living in villages, is in the main a scattered population and is more essentially rural in character than the total rural given in Table 31, which includes the inhabitants of small incorporated places. It may be noted that the conditions of environment and of occupation for the population of small as well as of large municipalities are essentially different from the conditions which prevail in distinctly rural districts.

The group of cities having 1,000,000 or more inhabitants comprised the same three cities—New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. At each of the four censuses covered by the table, but each of the other groups has been made up of an increasing number of cities from census to census. The proportion which the population of each group forms of the total for the country has also varied from census to census, with very few exceptions. The only exception for the decade 1910-1920 appears in the case of the group comprising cities of 250,000 to 500,000, which has attained 1.5 per cent of the total population, or nearly the two cities per cent. This explanation is to be found in the presence of four important cities—Buffalo, Detroit, Los Angeles, and San Francisco—having risen from that next above, the aggregate population of these four cities being considerably greater than that of the six cities which entered the group from that next below during the same period.

In Table 32 the cities are grouped so as to throw into perspective the total population living in all cities having more than the specified minimum.

TABLE 32. NUMBER AND POPULATION OF PLACES OF VARIOUS SIZES, 1890-1920.

PLACES OF VARIOUS SIZES	1890	1900	1910	1920
Over 1,000,000	1	1	1	1
500,000 to 1,000,000	1	1	1	1

50,000 to 100,000	1	1	1	1
25,000 to 50,000	1	1	1	1
10,000 to 25,000	1	1	1	1
5,000 to 10,000	1	1	1	1
Under 5,000	1	1	1	1

It will be noted that the proportion of the population living in cities having 500,000 inhabitants or more has more than doubled since 1890. This great increase is due in part, however, to the fact that the number of cities having more than 500,000 inhabitants was three times as great in 1920 as in 1890. The increase, from 5.8 per cent in 1890 to 9.6 per cent in 1920, in the proportion which the population living in cities having 1,000,000 inhabitants or more forms of the total, becomes more striking when it is remembered that this results entirely from the growth of the three cities—New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia—which have composed this group since 1890.

Divisions and states. The population, in 1920, of urban places, classified in five size groups, and of rural districts, is shown by geographic sections and divisions in Table 33, from which the percentages in Table 34 are derived. The number of urban groups shown in these tables has been reduced to five because of the very great differences which appear among the several divisions with respect to the distribution of the urban population among communities of various sizes. Only two of the nine divisions contained cities having more than 1,000,000 inhabitants in 1920, and one division contained no city having 250,000 or more inhabitants. The grouping adopted is such as to show for each division at least two cities belonging to each group.

It will be seen from Table 33 that the concentration of the population in cities of 100,000 and over is greatest in the Middle Atlantic and the Pacific divisions, bordering on the Atlantic and the Pacific seaboard, respectively. Disregarding the Pacific division, by far the greatest concentration in large cities is found in the Northern States east of the Mississippi River. In the North as a whole the proportion in cities of 100,000 or more was over three times as great as in the South and was more than one-fourth greater than in the West. In the section east of the Mississippi River the corresponding proportion was nearly three-fourths greater than in that west of the Mississippi.

In the North as a whole, in the section east of the Mississippi River considered as a whole, and in each of the three northern divisions lying east of the Mississippi, the proportion of the population in each group of cities is greater than in the group next below; but in the South as a whole, in each southern division separately, and in each division west of the Mississippi River except the Mountain division, the proportion was greater for cities of 2,500 to 5,000 than for those of 5,000 to 10,000.

The population of the several divisions and states at the last four Federal censuses is distributed among urban places grouped according to specified limits of population, and rural districts, in Table 35. Including the District of Columbia, which is wholly urban and is independent of any state, the 287 urban places having 25,000 inhabitants or more in 1920 are distributed among 41 states, the 7 states in which there were no cities above this size being Idaho, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Vermont, and Wyoming.

Proportion of urban population living in each class of urban places.—Table 36 shows, for the United States as a whole, for the last four censuses, the proportion which the population of each urban class formed, not of the total population of the country, but of the urban population alone.

It will be noted that the proportion of the urban population in the smaller cities—those having from 2,500 to 25,000 inhabitants—has been decreasing from census to census, while the proportions in the other classes of cities have fluctuated somewhat.

INCREASE IN URBAN AND RURAL POPULATION.

In Table 50 (p. 150) the percentages of increase or decrease in the urban and rural population of the states and counties represent merely the difference between the population of the urban and the rural territory as constituted in a given census year and of the urban and the rural territory, respectively, as constituted in the preceding census year. As already pointed out, however, the territory treated as urban in one census year includes some small cities which were treated as rural at the time of the preceding census. In a few cases also, where small cities decreased in population, the reverse change took place. Similarly, a given group of urban places, classified according to size, may not contain exactly the same cities in one census year as in another. In order, therefore, to present fairly the contrast between specified size groups of urban communities and between urban and rural communities in regard to their rates of growth, it is necessary to consider the changes in population which have taken place from one decennial census to another in the same territory. For this purpose the population totals, in 1920, for the several groups of urban places as constituted in 1920, and for the rural territory as constituted in that year, are compared with the totals for the same territory in 1910 (so far as reported separately at that census). This method avoids the disturbing effect on the rate of growth which otherwise would arise from the passage of certain communities from the rural to the urban or from the urban to the rural class, or from one urban group to another.

It should be noted in this connection that even if there were no difference between urban and rural communities and between the various groups of urban communities in respect of rate of growth, there would nevertheless be a constantly decreasing proportion of rural population and a constantly increasing proportion of population in the largest cities so long as the population of the country as a whole was increasing. Were there no movement from country to city, from city to country, or from one class of urban communities to another, no disturbing effect from immigration, and no difference between different classes of communities in regard to natural increase resulting from excess of births over deaths, there would still be, in a growing population, a constant passage of certain communities from the rural to the urban class and from each urban class to the one next above. The rural municipalities, maintaining a rate of growth uniform with that of the country as a whole, would, one by one, pass the limit of 2,500 inhabitants fixed as the dividing line between urban and rural communities, and the urban communities would similarly pass the dividing line between one size group and another. Thus the proportion of rural population would decrease gradually from census to census and the proportion which the population of the size group containing the largest cities formed of the total for the country would increase, while no great changes would take place in the proportions for the intermediate groups. As a matter of fact, however, in the United States the urban communities have far greater rates of growth than the rural communities, and the rapid increase in the proportion of urban population is due largely to this difference in rates of growth.

United States as a whole.—Table 37 shows, for the United States as a whole and for each geographic section, the increase between 1910 and 1920 in the population of the urban and of the rural territory as constituted in 1920.

It will be noted that, despite the decreases in population shown by so many counties between 1910 and 1920 (see Table 25, p. 42), nevertheless the population of the territory rural in 1920 showed an increase for each of the three geographic sections.

Territory rural in 1910.....	49,348,883	11.2

Table 38 shows, for the country as a whole, the increase between 1910 and 1920 in the urban territory and in the rural territory as constituted in 1920, the urban territory being subdivided into nine groups of cities classified according to size.

The rate of increase in the population of the territory urban in 1920 was nearly five times as great as that in the population of the territory rural in 1920. The cities having 500,000 to 1,000,000 inhabitants and those of 25,000 to 250,000 increased at materially greater rates than those in the remaining groups.

Divisions and states.—Table 39 shows, by divisions and states, the increase between 1910 and 1920 in urban and rural territory as constituted in 1920, the urban territory being subdivided into three groups of cities classified according to size.

The only division which showed a decrease in population for the territory rural in 1920 was the East North Central, for which a decline of six-tenths of 1 per cent appears. In the Mountain division the rate of increase in the population of the territory rural in 1920 not only exceeded that for the territory urban in 1920 in the same division, but also exceeded the average rate of increase in the population of the territory urban in 1920 throughout the entire United States.

In 15 states the population of the territory rural in 1920 decreased during the decade. Of these states, 5 were in New England, 1 in the Middle Atlantic group, 3 in the East North Central, 2 in the West North Central, 2 in the South Atlantic, 1 in the East South Central, and 1 in the Mountain division. The states in which the groups of cities having 100,000 inhabitants or more in 1920 increased at rates more than twice as great as that for the entire population of the United States, both urban and rural (14.9 per cent), numbered 10, namely, Connecticut, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, Maryland, Virginia, Alabama, Texas, and California.

CITIES AND THEIR SUBURBS.

In presenting population statistics for cities the Bureau of the Census must necessarily deal with them as political units, showing for each city the population actually residing within its municipal boundaries. In many cases, however, the number of inhabitants enumerated within the municipal boundaries gives an inadequate idea of the population grouped about one urban center. In fact, in only a few of the large cities do the municipal boundaries closely define the urban area. Immediately beyond the political limits of many cities, and connected with them by rapid-transportation systems, are densely populated suburban districts which industrially and socially are parts of the cities themselves, differing only in the matter of governmental organization.

It is desirable to show the magnitude of each of the principal urban areas taken as a whole. Statistics have, therefore, been compiled showing, for each city in the United States having 100,000 inhabitants or more, the population within the city limits and the population in adjoining communities that may be considered as intimately associated with the urban centers. Two sets of computations have been made:

(1) For each city having 100,000 inhabitants or more within its municipal boundaries a computation has been made to determine the combined population of the city itself and of the suburban territory within 10 miles of the city boundaries. The areas thus mapped out may be briefly defined as "cities and adjacent territory."

(2) In the case of each city having within its own boundaries 200,000 inhabitants or more, there has been delimited what may be termed a "metropolitan district," which includes, in addition to the city itself, only those sections of the adjacent territory which may be considered as urban in character.

METHOD OF DEFINING DISTRICTS.

In outlining the two classes of districts the civil divisions within the 10-mile limit are first selected and their population and area ascertained. Such civil divisions as are divided by a line drawn within 10 miles of the city boundaries are included if one-half of their population or one-half of their area lies within the 10-mile limit. State boundaries are disregarded, so that in some cases the adjacent territory and the metropolitan district lie partly in one state and partly in another. The area within the 10-mile limit just defined is the "adjacent territory." It differs considerably, of course, from the territory included between the city boundaries and a line drawn parallel to them at an exact distance of 10 miles, because in delimiting the adjacent territory no civil divisions are subdivided. The outline of the area, therefore, must conform to the boundaries of the political divisions which lie along the outer limits of the included area. Because of this fact the boundaries of the adjacent territory thus defined may vary considerably from point to point in their actual distance from the city limits.

The "metropolitan district," which, as previously noted, has as its nucleus a city having at least 200,000 inhabitants, comprises the population and area of the central city itself and of those minor civil divisions lying within the adjacent territory which at the last census had 150 or more inhabitants per square mile. Where the density of population was less than this the division was considered as rural rather than urban in character and as not properly a part of the metropolitan district. This limit of density, however, was not always rigidly applied; in a few instances a minor civil division having a density of less than 150 per square mile has been included, because it was nearly or completely surrounded by other divisions the density of which would require their inclusion. The exceptions in such cases are considered to be justified in order to avoid undue irregularity in the outlines of the districts or gaps lying wholly within their area.

It is safe to say that these deviations from the rule have had very little effect upon the population totals for the districts and have yielded on the whole more consistent and satisfactory results than would have been obtained by the application of any rigid rule. In fact, absolute exactness in applying a density limit is out of the question, because in a few cases the areas of the minor civil divisions as measured from the maps and data available are not absolutely correct.

In general, the city with its adjacent territory, as here defined, includes, in addition to the central city, all cities, towns, villages, or other civil divisions located within 10 miles beyond the boundaries of the central city, while the metropolitan district includes, besides the central city, only those divisions within the 10-mile limit in which the population at the last census was at least 150 per square mile. The civil divisions comprised within these limits, so far as they were returned separately in 1920, are given in detail in the statements which follow Tables 40 and 41 (pp. 65-71 and 73-75).

METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS.

Table 40 shows, for 1920 and 1910, the population of the 29 metropolitan districts containing individual cities having 200,000 inhabitants or more, distinguishing the population living within the city proper from that outside the city. The total population of each city with all its "adjacent territory" is also shown. The 29 metropolitan districts comprise 32 central cities and their suburban territory, there being 3 districts each of which includes 2 cities so large that both together are treated as constituting the urban center of the district. These cities are Minneapolis and St. Paul; Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo.; and San Francisco and Oakland. Two cities having more than 200,000 inhabitants each—Newark and Jersey

City--do not appear separately in the table, being included within the metropolitan district of New York.

The importance of the suburbs of great cities is brought out clearly by the combined statistics for the 29 metropolitan districts, which appear at the beginning of the table. It will be seen that the area of the suburban territory outside the central cities represents fully three-fourths of the entire area of the metropolitan districts, and that the population of these suburbs in 1920 constituted nearly one-fourth of the entire population of the districts. Moreover, during the 10-year period covered by the table the rate of increase in the population of the suburban areas was considerably greater than the corresponding rate for the central cities.

In addition to the population of the 29 metropolitan districts themselves the census returns for 1920 show an aggregate population of 949,961 residing in territory adjacent to the central cities but not included in the metropolitan district—that is, in civil divisions which lie wholly or in greater part within 10 miles of the boundaries of the central cities, but in which the density of population was not sufficient to justify treating them as strictly urban. The total population residing in 1920 either in cities having 200,000 inhabitants or more or within approximately 10 miles of such cities constituted 28.6 per cent of the total population of the United States.

It will be noted from Table 40 that great differences appear among the several metropolitan districts in regard to the proportion which the population outside the central city represents of the total population of the district. These differences are due to the fact that some of the large cities have made no annexations of territory for many years, while others have made extensive annexations, with the result that most of the densely populated areas within the metropolitan districts have been added to the cities themselves. The column in the table giving the areas of the various districts brings out the wide variations in the density of population of the central cities, some of which have several times as many inhabitants per acre as others. This difference in policy among the cities in regard to the extension of municipal boundaries makes it the more obviously necessary to exclude thinly settled areas in the neighborhood of the cities in calculating the true metropolitan population, for, in the case of a city of relatively great area, there is necessarily also a large area lying within 10 miles beyond the municipal limits, many portions of which are likely to be rural rather than urban in character. The table emphasizes the well-known fact that many of the large cities have a materially different rank when their suburbs are taken into account from that which they hold when only the population living within their municipal boundaries is considered.

CITIES OF 100,000 TO 200,000 INHABITANTS AND THEIR ADJACENT TERRITORY.

Table 41 shows, for 1920 and 1910, for each city having from 100,000 to 200,000 inhabitants, the population within the city proper, the population in other civil divisions all or more than half of which—either in area or in population—lie within 10 miles of the city boundaries, and the combined population of the city and such adjacent territory. In five cases cities of 100,000 to 200,000 do not appear in this table because they form parts of metropolitan districts. These cities are Paterson, N. J., and Yonkers, N. Y., which form part of the New York district; Cambridge, Mass., which is included in the Boston district; Camden, N. J., which forms part of the Philadelphia district; and Kansas City, Kans., which is included in the Kansas City district. (See Table 40.) Moreover, in three cases there are one or more cities within the adjacent territory which approximate in population the central city itself. In such cases the names of the smaller cities are inserted in parentheses immediately below those of the central cities from whose boundaries the distances are determined.

For reasons already stated, it should not be considered that the total population shown by Table 41 is strictly urban in character, or that the figures afford an accurate comparison of the relative importance of the several cities as centers of urban population. They do, however, indicate the relative importance approximately. The area of the adjacent territory outside the central cities represents 95.3 per cent of the entire area of the districts, while its population in 1920 constituted 38.1 per cent of the entire population of the districts.

It is noteworthy that, whereas the population of the suburban districts of the metropolitan areas shown in Table 40 increased at a considerably greater rate during the decade than did the population of the central cities themselves, the reverse is true of the cities and adjacent areas shown in Table 41; in fact, the average rate of increase in the adjacent areas was less than two-thirds as great as in the central cities.

The fact that the population of the adjacent territory is larger relatively to that of the central cities covered by Table 41 than it is in the case of the larger cities shown in Table 40 should not be misunderstood. This does not imply that the smaller cities have relatively more important suburbs than the larger. It is due to two causes, namely, (1) that the smaller the size of the city the greater is the proportion which the adjacent area forms of the total; (2) that in Table 41 a number of cities are included, principally in New York state and in New England, in whose adjacent territory there are other cities of large size which can not in any true sense be considered suburbs. For example, Troy and Schenectady can not be considered as suburbs of Albany, but these three cities combined, together with other adjacent territory, constitute what may in a sense be regarded as a single urban community.

TABLE 11.—AREA AND POPULATION OF CENTRAL CITY AND OF ADJACENT TERRITORY, FOR CITIES OF 100,000 TO 200,000 INHABITANTS: 1920 AND 1910.

[Population shown for central cities for each census year does not include that of annexations made subsequently to census date, but total population given for each district for 1920 and 1910 relates to same area.]

Table 42 gives a condensed summary of the statistics in Tables 40 and 41. While an appreciable proportion of the population of the adjacent territory is more or less rural in character, nevertheless the table gives a comprehensive idea of the importance of the leading urban areas of the country.

The total population in 1920 of the 58 districts covered by this table was 36,886,961, or 34.9 per cent of the total population of the United States. It will be noted that the average rates of increase during the decade in the population of the central cities and of the adjacent territory were similar.

POPULATION OF INDIVIDUAL CITIES.

This section presents summary tables showing the population of individual cities having 100,000 inhabitants or more at each census from 1790 to 1920, and of cities having 25,000 inhabitants or more at each census from 1850 to 1920. The population of all cities, boroughs, villages, and other municipalities (and of towns in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island which had 2,500 inhabitants or more in 1920) is shown for 1920, 1910, and 1900 in Table 51 (p. 178), in which the arrangement is alphabetical by states. This table shows also the population in 1920 of wards of cities having 5,000 inhabitants or more. In Table 52 those incorporated places (and those towns in the three states above named) which had 2,500 inhabitants or more in 1920 are classified according to size in four groups, the arrangement within each group being alphabetical by states.

Unless otherwise explained by footnote, the population shown for each city in any census year is that of the city as constituted at the time the census was taken. It should be kept in mind, therefore, that in many instances the growth shown by the figures may have been due in part to annexations of suburban territory. In cases where parts of townships or other county subdivisions have been annexed to incorporated places, the population of such annexed territory can not be determined separately; but where an incorporated place or an entire township has been annexed, the population, in 1910 and 1900, of such annexed territory is shown in footnotes to Table 53, to which cross references are made by footnotes to Table 51.

Cities of 250,000 inhabitants or more.—Table 43 shows, for each of the last four census years, the population, rank, and decennial increase in population for the 25 cities having, in 1920, more than 250,000 inhabitants, the cities being listed in the order of their rank in 1920.

TABLE 43.—POPULATION, RANK, AND DECENNIAL INCREASE FOR CITIES HAVING, IN 1920, 250,000 INHABITANTS OR MORE: 1890-1920.

[Except as explained in footnotes, population shown for each census year does not include that of territory subsequently annexed.]

* Includes population of territory annexed between 1890 and 1900.

* Includes population of Allegheny, 129,899 in 1900, 162,271 in 1910.

Six cities—Kansas City, Mo., Seattle, Indianapolis, Rochester, Portland, and Denver—entered this group between 1910 and 1920. The rank of the largest 3 cities has remained unchanged since 1890, but Detroit, which ranked fifteenth in 1890, thirteenth in 1900, and ninth in 1910, advanced to fourth position in 1920. Cleveland also gained in rank from census to census during the 30-year period. Ten cities gained in rank between 1910 and 1920. The greatest advance shown for any of the cities in this group is that which appears for Los Angeles—from fifty-seventh position in 1890 to thirty-sixth in 1900, seventeenth in 1910, and tenth in 1920.

Cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more.—The cities having 100,000 inhabitants or more, as returned at the census of 1920, numbered 68. Eighteen of these cities passed the 100,000 limit between 1910 and 1920, namely, Akron, Ohio, Camden, N. J., Dallas, Tex., Des Moines, Ia., Fort Worth, Tex., Hartford, Conn., Houston, Tex., Kansas City, Kans., New Bedford, Mass., Norfolk, Va., Reading, Pa., Salt Lake City, Utah, San Antonio, Tex., Springfield, Mass., Trenton, N. J., Wilmington, Del., Yonkers, N. Y., and Youngstown, Ohio.

Of the 25 cities which increased at rates greater than 100 per cent between 1910 and 1920, 17 are in the North, 6 in the South, and 2 in the West. These 25 cities, however, include Norwalk, Conn., whose nominal increase was due mainly to an annexation of territory, and Bethlehem, Pa., whose nominal increase resulted principally from a consolidation with South Bethlehem. The increase computed for each city as constituted in 1920 would be much less than 100 per cent.

Table 45 lists the 23 cities, excluding Norwalk and Bethlehem, which increased at rates greater than 100 per cent, in the descending order of their rates of increase, and presents for each the population in 1920 and the rate of increase between 1910 and 1920.

Table 48 shows the population, at each census from 1850 to 1920, of the cities having 25,000 inhabitants or more in 1920, together with the decennial increase during the two decades from 1900 to 1920.

Table 47 shows, for each Federal census from 1850 to 1920, the population of the largest 50 cities, in the order of their rank at each of the several censuses. A considerable number of cities which ranked among the largest 50 at some of the earlier censuses have since been supplanted by others which have increased more rapidly in population, and a number of cities whose names appear in the lists for previous census years have since been consolidated with larger cities.

Figures for 1890 and previous census years show population of cities as then constituted (same as present borough of Manhattan) and the five surrounding counties of Westchester, Dutchess, Albany, Rensselaer, and Saratoga.

POPULATION OF MINOR CIVIL DIVISIONS.

The political units into which the counties or equivalent divisions are subdivided are collectively termed "minor civil divisions." In most states these minor civil divisions comprise two classes, which are termed primary and secondary. The primary divisions are variously known as townships, towns (unincorporated), election precincts, beats, etc. In most states the smaller cities and other municipalities form parts of the primary minor civil divisions in which they are located; and are therefore termed secondary divisions; but in Pennsylvania all incorporated places, regardless of their size, are independent political units, not forming parts of any civil divisions smaller than a county; in New Jersey all incorporated places form primary divisions except 3 cities, 1 town, and 2 villages, each of which is coextensive with the township in which located; and in certain other states some of the small municipalities are primary divisions and others are secondary divisions. The large cities in a few cases are coextensive with the counties in which located; Baltimore and St. Louis are independent of the counties; and of the remainder, aside from the Virginia cities, part constitute primary and part secondary minor civil divisions. In Virginia all the cities except two, regardless of their size, are independent of the counties.

Table 53 shows, for states and counties, the population of all primary minor civil divisions, so far as reported separately at the census of 1920, with comparative figures so far as available for 1910 and 1900. The secondary divisions, all of which are incorporated places and therefore appear in Table 51, are not shown separately in Table 53.

Such general explanations and definitions as are needed in regard to the minor civil divisions in any state are made in a headnote at the beginning of the section for that state; and explanations in regard to individual minor civil divisions are made in footnotes.

OUTLYING POSSESSIONS.

All available statistics to number and distribution of the principal types of settlements enumerated at the Tenthenth Census have been included in Table 54. The Philippines and the Virgin Islands were not enumerated at the Tenthenth Census, but the total shown by the latest censuses of each of these possessions are given in Table 54, p. 17.

Alaska. Alaska was purchased by the United States from Russia in March, 1867. The first enumeration of the population by the United States was made in 1890, based on a census of all accessible territory.

At that time approximately one-half of the territory was reported by the principal heads of municipalities for the census, which could not be reached by the enumerators. A similar practice was followed in 1899, but the census actually covered in that year was larger than that covered in 1890, and at each of the subsequent censuses the enumeration has been more nearly complete and accurate. Alaska has no county organization, but the principal districts into which the territory is divided are treated for census purposes as equivalent to county divisions. The primary municipal divisions are the territorial districts. In Table 54 comparisons of figures for 1910 only are given, the censuses of 1890 and 1899 being included in the notes to the population figures. The most generally reliable estimate of the population is that reported for earlier years.

Hawaii. Hawaii became an independent republic, was annexed to the United States in August, 1898. The first Federal census of the territory was taken in 1900, as a part of the decennial census of that year. The comparative figures for 1910 which appear in Table 54 were derived from a census taken on December 28, 1899, under the direction of the Hawaiian Government. The territory is divided into 5 counties, whose primary civil divisions comprise 27 election districts and the Island of Midway. Separate statistics for the population of the 9 inhabited islands of the archipelago are also given.

Porto Rico. Porto Rico was ceded by Spain to the United States December 10, 1898, and was first enumerated at a Federal decennial census in 1910. A special census had been taken, however, under the direction of the War Department in 1899. Porto Rico is divided into 76 municipalities, each of which, except San Juan, which is wholly urban, comprises both urban and rural districts, known as barrios. As a rule a municipality consists of a single urban settlement and outlying rural districts, but in a few cases there is, besides the principal settlement which gives the name to the municipality, another detached settlement, termed for census purposes a village. In some cases a town consists of two or more barrios, but in most of the smaller municipalities a single barrio, usually designated as "pueblo," constitutes the town settlement. The distinction between the urban and rural barrios is a physical and not a political one, there being no difference in governmental status between the two classes of communities. Most of the barrios are either wholly urban or wholly rural in character, but a few comprise both urban and rural territory.

Guam. The island of Guam was ceded by Spain to the United States December 10, 1898, but was not enumerated at a Federal decennial census until 1920, when the census was made under the direction of the naval governor in accordance with plans prescribed by the Director of the Census. Previous enumerations had been made, however, under the direction of the governor. For administrative purposes the island is divided into 6 districts, namely, Agaña, Agaña, Inarajan, Merizo, Sumay, and Yona. The enumerators did not make separate returns for the 6 districts, however, and accordingly Table 54 presents the distribution of the population of the island by barrios, cities, and towns.

American Samoa. American Samoa came into the possession of the United States by the Tripartite Treaty of November 14, 1899, entered into by the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, but was not enumerated at a Federal decennial census until 1920, when the census was made under the direction of the naval governor in accordance with plans prescribed by the Director of the Census. Previous enumerations had been made, however, under the direction of the governor. For administrative purposes American Samoa is divided into three districts—Eastern District of Tutuila, Western District of Tutuila, and Manua District, which in turn are divided into counties. Table 54 shows the distribution of the population by districts, counties, and villages.

Panama Canal Zone. The Panama Canal Zone came into the possession of the United States by treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, signed November 18, 1903, but was not enumerated at a Federal decennial census until 1920, when the census was made under the direction of the governor in accordance with plans prescribed by the Director of the Census. A number of previous enumerations had been made, however, under the direction of the governor. The zone is divided for administrative purposes into the Balboa district and the Cristobal district. No minor civil divisions exist.

COLORADO.

[In computing the increase from 1890 to 1900 for certain counties, the population of Indian reservations in 1900 has been deducted from the total population of the county in order to make it comparable with the total for 1890, which does not include the population of Indian reservations. The population thus deducted for the several counties was as follows: Archuleta, 103; La Plata, 456; Montezuma, 559.]

IDAHO.

[In computing the increase from 1890 to 1900 for certain counties, the population of Indian reservations in 1900 has been deducted from the total population of the county in order to make it comparable with the total for 1890, which does not include the population of Indian reservations. The deductions thus made for the several counties are as follows: Bingham, 939; Kootenai, 782; Lemhi, 486.]

KANSAS.

[In computing the percentage of increase from 1890 to 1900 for certain counties, the population of Indian reservations in 1900 has been deducted from the total population of the county in order to make it comparable with the total for 1890, which does not include the population of Indian reservations. ## NORTH DAKOTA.

[In computing the increase from 1890 to 1900 for certain counties, the population of Indian reservations in 1900 has been deducted from the total population of the county in order to make it comparable with the total for 1890, which does not include the population of Indian reservations. The deductions thus made for the several counties are as follows: Benson, 1,263; McLean, 993; Mercer, 40; Morton, 2,208; Rolette, 2,393.]

In computing the increase from 1890 to 1900 for certain counties, the population of Indian reservations in 1900 has been deducted from the total population of the county in order to make it comparable with the total for 1890, which does not include the population of Indian reservations. The population thus deducted for the several counties was as follows: Crook, 555; Klamath, 1,136; Polk, 132; Umatilla, 1,397; Wasco, 282; Yamhill, 230.]

[1] - several other studies have shown that the number of years spent in the US is positively related to the level of education, and that this relationship is still true for the elderly. See, for example, Borjas (1995), and Borjas and Tirole (1998). The latter study shows that the relationship between years in the US and education is stronger for the elderly than for the young. This is also true for the relationship between years in the US and the level of education. For the elderly, the relationship is stronger for those with a high school diploma or less than for those with a college degree. For the young, the relationship is stronger for those with a college degree than for those with a high school diploma or less. *1977-1978-Totals for 1977 and 1978 include populations (77 and 21, respectively)

1. In 1919, the township, taken from North River, Ia and South River, Ia was divided into two parts. The northern part was named North River and the southern part was named South River. The township was divided into two parts in 1919.

of Brunswick. It is the largest town in Brunswick County (46 and 31, respectively) and has been a town, separated to Hart township since 1910. Incorporation into Hart township is an from part of Newbury township; New Littleton town from part of Hart township; Bechtel town from part of Vista township.

3. CLARKSVILLE.—Arkansas Village, incorporated as a city since 1947.

* Excluded—Unorganized; within limits of Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Population not reported separately in 1910 and 1920, but included with that of Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Total population of Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, counting the unorganized counties of Shannon, Washburn, and Washington: 12,414 in 1920, 6,907 in 1910, 6,227 in 1900. Three unorganized fractional townships, of which no population was reported in 1920, are not shown in this table.

Notes.—Parish had been incorporated from part of La Prairie township, and Tularosa from part of Tularosa township, since 1910. Population for Redfield city in 1910 excludes that of an institution in Redfield township, incorrectly returned as part of the city in 1910.

TEXAS—Continued.

[Precinct, unless otherwise stated, means justice precinct. Counties showing no totals for 1910 or 1900 have been organized from parts of other counties at some time between the censuses; counties showing totals but no comparative precinct figures for 1910 or 1900 have been redivided at some time between the censuses or have been organized from unorganized counties of same names. For other changes in boundaries, etc., between 1910 and 1920, see footnotes; for those between 1900 and 1910, see Reports of the Thirteenth Census: 1910, Vol. III, Table 1, p. 778. For population of incorporated places, see Table 51.]
